PREFACE

The translation of this volume, from Book III chavill to the end of Book IV, is the work of Professor H. A. Ormerod, of Leeds. It was hoped that he would continue to help the editors, but he was compelled to give up collaboration owing to the pressure of University teaching

Various causes have postponed the appearance of this book, but it is hoped that the remaining two volumes will be completed without undue delay

DESCRIPTION OF GREECE

BOOK III

LACONIA

I After the figures of Hermes we reach Laconia on the west According to the tradition of the Lacedaemonians themselves, Lelev, an abougunal, was the first king in this land, after whom his subjects were named Leleges Lelex had a son Myles, and a younger one Polycaon retired into exile, the place of this retirement and its reason I will set forth elsewhere On the death of Myles his son Eurotas succeeded to the thione He led down to the sea by means of a trench the stagnant water on the plain, and when it had flowed away, as what was left for med a river-stream, he named it Eurotas 1 Having no male issue, he left the kingdom to Lacedaemon, whose mother was Taygete, after whom the mountain was named, while according to report his father was none other than Zeus Lacedaemon was wedded to Sparta, a daughter of Eurotas When he came to the thione, he flist changed the names of the land and its inhabitants, calling them

Hvacinthus, the youngest and most beautiful of his sons, died before his father, and his tomb is in Amyclae below the image of Apollo On the death of Amyclas the empire came to Argalus, the eldest of his sons, and afterwards, when Argalus died, to Cynoitas Cynoitas had a son Oebalus took a wife from Argos, Gorgophone the daughter of Perseus, and begat a son Tyndaieus, with whom Hippocoon disputed about the kingship, claiming the throne on the ground of being the elder the aid of Icanius and his partisans he far surpassed Tyndaleus in power, and folced him to retile in feal; the Lacedaemonians say that he went to Pellana, but a Messenian legend about him is that he fled to Aphareus in Messenia, Aphareus being the son of Peneres and the brother of Tyndareus on his mother's The story goes on to say that he settled at side Thalamae in Messenia, and that his children were boin to him when he was hving there Subsequently Tyndareus was brought back by Heracles and 1ecovered his thione His sons too became kings, as did Menelaus the son of Atreus and son-in-law of Tyndaieus, and Orestes the husband of Heimione the daughter of Menelaus. Heracleidae in the reign of Tisamenus, son of Orestes, both districts, Messene and Argos, had kings put over them; Aigos had Temenus and Messene Cresphontes. In Lacedaemon, as the sons of Austodemus were twins, there alose two royal houses, for they say that the Pythian priestess approved Tradition has it that Aristodemus himself died at Delphi before the Domans returned to the Peloponnesus, but those who gloufy his fate assert that he was shot by Apollo for not going to the oracle, having learned from Heracles, who met him before he arrived there, that the Dorrans would make this return to the Peloponnesus more correct account is that Aristodemus was murdered by the sons of Pylades and Electra, who were cousins of Tisamenus son of Orestes names given to the sons of Aiistodemus were Procles and Eurysthenes, and although they were twins they were bitter enemies Their enmity reached a high pitch, but never theless they combined to help Theras, the son of Autesion and the brother of their mother Argera and their guardian as well, to found a colony This colony Theras was dispatching to the island that was then called Calliste, and he hoped that the descendants of Membhaius would of their own accord give up the kingship to him This as a matter of fact they did, taking into account that the family of Theras went back to Cadmus himself, while they were only descendants of Membharus, who was a man of the people whom Cadmus left in the island to be the leader of the settlers And Theras changed the name of the island, renaming it after himself, and even at the present day the people of Thera every year offer to him as their founder the sacrifices that are given to a hero. Procles and Eurysthenes were of one mind in their eagerness to serve Theras, but in all else their purposes were always widely different. Even if they had agreed together, I should never have ventured to include their descendants in a common list; for they did not altogether coincide in respect of age, so that cousins, cousins' children, and later generations were not born so as to make the steps in one pedigree coincide with those of the other. So I shall give the history of each house by itself separately, instead of combining them both in one narrative.

II Eurysthenes, the elder of the sons of Aristodemus, had, they say, a son Agis, after whom the family of Eurysthenes is called the Agradae time, when Patreus the son of Preugenes was founding in Achaea a city which even at the present day is called Patiae from this Patieus, the Lacedaemonians took part in the settlement. They also joined in an expedition oversea to found a colony Gras the son of Echelas the son of Penthilus the son of Orestes was the leader, who was destined to occupy the land between Ionia and Mysia, called at the present day Aeolis, his ancestor Penthilus had even before this seized the island of Lesbos that lies over against this part of the mainland When Echestiatus, son of Agis, was king at Spaita, the Lacedaemonians removed all the Cynurians of military age, alleging as a reason that freebooters from the Cynuian territory were harrying Argolis, the Argives being their kinsmen, and that the Cynuians themselves openly made forays into the land Cynunans are said to be Argives by descent, and tradition has it that their founder was Cynuius, son of Perseus Not many years afterwards Labotas, son of Echestiatus, became king in Sparta Labotas Herodotus, in his history of Croesus, says was in his childhood the ward of Lycuigus the lawgiver, but he calls him Leobotes and not Labotas It was then that the Lacedaemonians first resolved to make war upon the Aigives, bringing as charges against them that they were annexing the Cynurian territory which they themselves had captured, and were causing revolts among their subjects the Perioeci (Dwellers around) On this occasion neither of the belligerents, according to the account achieved anything worthy of mention and the next kings of this house, Doryssus, son of Labotas, and Agesilaus, son of Dorvssus, were soon both killed Lycurgus too laid down their laws for the Lacedaemonians in the reign of Agesilaus, some say that he was taught how to do this by the Pythian priestess, others that he introduced Cretan institutions The Cretans say that these laws of thems were laid down by Minos, and that Minos was not without divine aid in his deliberations conceining them. Homei 1 too, I think, refers in riddling words to the legislation of Minos in the following verses -

"Cnossus too, great city, among them, where Minos for nine years Ruled as king, and enjoyed familiai converse with great Zeus"

Of Lycurgus I shall make further mention later Agesilaus had a son Archelaus In his reign the Lacedaemonians took by force of arms Aegys, a city of the Perioeci, and sold the inhabitants into slavery, suspecting them of Aicadian sympathies Chaillaus, the king of the other house, helped Aichelaus to destroy Aegys, but the exploits he achieved when leading the Lacedaemonians by himself, these too I shall relate when my narrative comes to treat of those called the Eurypontidae Archelaus had a son Teleclus In his reign the Lacedaemonians conquered in war and reduced Amyelae, Phans, and Geranthiae, cities of the Perioeci, which were still in the possession of the Achaeans habitants of Pharis and Geranthiae, panic-stricken at the onslaught of the Donans, made an agreement to retire from the Peloponnesus under a truce, but those of Amyelae were not driven out at the first assault, but only after a long and stubboin resistance, in which they distinguished themselves by glorious achievements To this heroism the Dollans bore witness by raising a trophy against the Amyclaeans, implying that their success was the most memorable exploit of that time Not long after this Teleclus was muidered by Messenians in a sanctuary of Artemis This sanctuary was built on the frontier of Laconia and Messenia, in a place called Limnae (Lakes) After the death of Teleclus, Alcamenes his son succeeded to the throne, and the Lacedaemonians sent to Crete Charmidas the son of Euthys, who was a distinguished Spartan, to put down the civil strife among the Cietans, to persuade them to abandon the weak, inland towns, and to help them to people instead those that were conveniently situated for the coasting voyage. They also laid waste Helos, an Achaean town on the coast, and won a battle against the Argives who came to give aid to the Helots.

III On the death of Alcamenes, Polydorus his son succeeded to the throne, and the Lacedaemonians sent colonies to Cioton in Italy and to the Locii by the Westein Headland. The wai called the Messenian reached its height in the reign of this king. As to the causes of the wai, the Lacedaemonian version differs from the Messenian accounts given by the belligerents, and the manner in which this war ended, will be set forth later in my nairative For the present I must state thus much: the chief leader of the Lacedaemonians in the first war against the Messenians was Theopompus the son of Nicandei, a king of the other house When the war against Messene had been fought to a finish, and Messenia was enslaved to the Lacedaemonians, Polydoius, who had a great reputation at Sparta and was very popular with the massesfor he never did a violent act or said an insulting word to anyone, while as a judge he was both upright and humane-his fame having by this time spread throughout Greece, was murdered by Polemarchus, a member of a distinguished family in Lacedaemon, but, as he showed, a man of an unscrupulous temper After his death Polydorus received many signal marks of respect from the Lacedaemonians However, Polemarchus too has a tomb in Sparta, either he had been considered a good man before this murder, or perhaps his relatives buried him secretly

During the reign of Eurycrates, son of Polydorus, the Messenians submitted to be subjects of the Lacedaemonians, neither did any trouble befall from the Argive people But in the reign of Anaxander, son of Eurycrates - for destiny was by this time driving the Messenians out of all the Peloponnesus—the Messenians revolted from the Lacedaemonians For a time they held out by force of aims, but at last they were overcome and retired from the Peloponnesus under a truce. The remnant of them left behind in the land became the slaves of the Lacedaemonians, with the exception of those in the towns on the coast The incidents of the war which the Messenians waged after the revolt from the Lacedaemonians it is not pertinent that I should set forth in the present part of my narrative. Anaxander had a son Eurycrates, and this second Eurycrates a son Leon While these two kings were on the throne the Lacedaemonians were generally unsuccessful in the war with Tegea But in the leigh of Anaxandiides, son of Leon, the Lacedaemonians won the war with Tegea in the following manner A Lacedaemonian, by name Lichas, came to Tegea when there chanced to be a truce between the cities When Lichas airived the Spartans were seeking the bones of Orestes in accordance with an oracle Now Lichas inferred that they were buried in a smithy, the reason for this inference being this Everything that he saw in the smithy he compared with the oracle from Delphi, likening to the "winds" the bellows for that they too sent forth a violent blast, the hammer to the "stroke," the anvil to the "counterstroke" to it, while the non is naturally a "woe to man," because already men were using iron in warfare In the time of those called heroes the god would have called bronze a woe to man Similar to the oracle about the bones of Orestes was the one afterwards given to the Athenians, that they were to bring back Theseus from Scyros to Athens, otherwise they could not take Scylos Now the bones of Theseus were discovered by Cimon the son of Miltiades, who displayed similar sharpness of wit, and shortly afterwards took Sevios evidence that in the heroic age weapons were universally of bronze in the verses of Homer 1 about the axe of Peisander and the arrow of Meriones. My statement is likewise confirmed by the spear of Achilles dedicated in the sanctuary of Athena at Phaselis, and by the sword of Memnon in the Nicomedian temple of Asclepius The point and butt-spike of the spear and the whole of the sword are made of bronze. The truth of these statements I can youch for Anaxandiides the son of Leon was the only Lace-daemonian to possess at one and the same time two wives and two households. For his first consoit, though an excellent wife, had the misfortune to be bailen. When the ephois bade him put her away he firmly refused to do so, but made this concession to them, that he would take another wife in addition to her. The fruit of this union was a son, Cleomenes,

IV. Now Dorieus could not bear to stay at Lacedaemon and be subject to his brother, and so he went on a colonising expedition. As soon as he became king, Cleomenes gathered together an army, both of the Lacedaemonians themselves and of their allies. and invaded Argolis The Argives came out under aims to meet them, but Cleomenes won the day. Near the battlefield was a grove sacred to Argus, son of Niobe, and on being routed some five thousand of the Argives took refuge therein Cleomenes was subject to fits of mad excitement, and on this occasion he ordered the Helots to set the grove on fire, and the flames spread all over the grove, which, as it burned, burned up the suppliants with it conducted campaigns against Athens, by the first of which he delivered the Athenians from the sons 510 BC. of Peisistratus and won a good report among the Greeks both for himself personally and for the Lacedaemonians, while the second campaign was 508 BC. to please an Athenian, Isagoras, by helping him to establish a tyranny over Athens. When he was disappointed, and the Athenians fought stienuously for their freedom, Cleomenes devastated the country, including, they say, the district called Orgas, which was sacred to the derties in Eleusis He advanced responses about Demaratus It may well be too that the wrath of heroes and the wrath of gods united together to punish Cleomenes; since it is a fact that for a personal wrong Protesilaus, a hero not a whit more illustrious than Argus. punished at Elaeus Artayctes, a Peisian, while the Megarians nevel succeeded in propitiating the deities at Eleusis for having encroached upon the sacred land As to the tampering with the oracle, we know of nobody, with the exception of Cleomenes, who has had the audacity even to attempt it

Cleomenes had no male issue, and the kingdom devolved on Leonidas, son of Anaxandrides and full brother of Doneus. At this time Xerxes led his host against Greece, and Leonidas with three hundred Lacedaemonians met him at Thermopylae although the Greeks have waged many wars, and so have foreigners among themselves, yet there are but few that have been made more illustrious by the exceptional valous of one man, in the way that Achilles shed lustre on the Tiojan was and Miltiades on the engagement at Marathon But in truth the success of Leonidas surpassed, in my opinion, all later as well as all previous achievements. For Xerxes, the proudest 480 B.O of all who have reigned over the Medes, or over the Persians who succeeded them, the achiever of such bulliant exploits, was met on his maich by Leomdas and the handful of men he led to Thermopylae, and they would have prevented him from even seeing Greece at all, and from ever burning Athens, if the

Shortly after Pleistarchus the son of Leonidas came to the throne he died, and the kingdom devolved on Pleistoanax, son of the Pausanias who commanded at Plataea Pleistoanax had a son Pausanias: he was the Pausanias who invaded Attica, 403 BC ostensibly to oppose Thiasybulus and the Athenians, but really to establish firmly the despotism of those to whom the government had been entrusted by Lysander. Although he won a battle against the Athenians holding the Penaeus, yet immediately after the battle he resolved to lead his aimy back home, and not to bring upon Sparta the most disgraceful of reproaches by increasing the despotic power of wicked men When he returned from Athens with only a fruitless battle to his credit, he was brought to trial by his enemies The court that sat to try a Lacedaemonian king consisted of the senate, "old men" as they were called, twentyeight in number, the members of the ephorate, and in addition the king of the other house Fourteen senators, along with Agis, the king of the other house, declared that Pausanias was guilty: the rest of the court voted for his acquittal Shortly after this the Lacedaemonians gathered an army against Thebes; the reason for so doing will be given in my account of Agesilaus On this occasion Lysandei came to Phoeis, took along with him the entire Phocian aimy, and without any further delay entered Boeotia and began assaults upon the wall of Haliartus, the citizens of which refused to revolt from Thebes. Already a band of Thebans and Athenians had secretly entered the city, these came out and offered battle before the wall, and there fell here several Lacedaemonians, including Lysander himself sanias was too late for the fight, having collecting forces from Tegea and Arcadia generally; when he finally reached Boeotia, although he heard of the defeat of the forces with Lysander and of the death of Lysander himself, he nevertheless led his army against Thebes and purposed to take the offensive. Thereupon the Thebans offered battle, and Thrasybulus was reported to be not far away with the Athenians He was waiting for the Lacedaemonians to take the offensive, on which his intention was to launch an attack himself against So Pausanias, fearing lest he should be then rear caught between two enemy forces, made a truce with the Thebans and took up for burial those who had fallen under the wall of Hahartus The Lacedaemonians disapproved of this decision, but the following leason leads me to approve it Pausanias was well aware that the disasters of the Lacedaemonians always took place when they had been caught between two enemy forces, and the defeats at Thermopylae and on the Island of Sphacteria made him afraid lest he himself should prove the occasion of a thud misfortune for them. But when his fellow citizens charged him with his slowness in this Boeotian campaign, he did not wait to stand his trial, but was received by the people of Tegea as a suppliant of Athena Alea Now this sanctuary had been respected from early days by all the Peloponnesians, and afforded peculiar safety to its suppliants, as the Lacedaemonians showed in the case of Pausanias and of Leotychides before him, and the Argives in the case of Chivsis, they never wanted even to ask for these refugees, who were sitting as suppliants in the sanctuary, to be given up

When Pausanias fled, his sons Agesipolis and Cleombiotus were still quite boys, and Aristodemus, their nearest relative, was their guardian. This Aristodemus was in command of the Lacedaemonians when they won their success at Corinth. When Agesipolis grew up and came to the throne, the first Peloponnesians against whom he waged war were the Argives. When he led his army from the territory of Tegea into that of Argos, the Argives sent a herald to make for them with Agesipolis.

a certain ancestral truce, which from ancient times had been an established custom between Dorians and Dollans But Agesipolis did not make the truce with the herald, but advancing with his aimy proceeded to devastate the land there was an earthquake, but not even would Agesipolis consent to take away his forces. And yet more than any other Greeks were the Lacedaemonians (in this respect like the Athenians) frightened by signs from heaven. By the time that he was encamping under the wall of Aigos, the earthquakes were still occurring, some of the troops had actually been killed by lightning, and some moreover had been driven out of their senses by the thunder In this circumstance he reluctantly withdrew from Argive territory, and began another campaign, attacking Olynthus Victorious in the war, having captured most of the cities in Chalcidice, and hoping to capture Olvnthus itself, he was suddenly attacked by a disease which ended in 380 P C his death

VI As Agesipolis died childless, the kingdom devolved upon Cleombrotus, who was general in the battle at Leuctia against the Boeotians Cleom- 371 BC biotus showed personal biavery, but fell when the battle was only just beginning In great disasters Providence is peculiarly apt to cut off early the general, just as the Athemans lost Hippociates the son of Ariphion, who commanded at Delium, and 424 BC later on Leosthenes in Thessalv

Agesipolis, the elder of the sons of Cleombrotus, is not a striking figure in history, and was succeeded by his younger brother Cleomenes His first son was Acrotatus, his second Cleonymus Acrotatus did not outlive his father, and when Cleomenes afterwards died, there arose a dispute about the throne between Cleonymus the son of Cleomenes and Areus the son of Acrotatus So the senators acted as arbitrators, and decided that the dignity was the inheritance of Areus the son of Acrotatus, and not of Cleonymus Depuved of his kingship Cleonymus became violently angry, and the ephors tried to soothe his feelings by bestowing upon him various honours, especially the leadership of the armies, so as to prevent his becoming one day an enemy of Sparta But at last he committed many hostile acts against his fatherland, and induced Pyrihus the son of Aeacides to invade Laconia. While Areus the son of Acrotatus was king in Sparta, Antigonus the son of Demetiius attacked Athens c 262 with an aimy and a fleet. To the help of the Athenians there came the Egyptian expedition with Patroclus, and every available man of the Lacedaemonians with Areus their king at their head Antigonus invested Athens and prevented the Athenian reinforcements from entering the city; so Patioclus dispatched messengers urging Areus and the Lacedaemonians to take the offensive against Antigonus On their doing so, he would himself, he said, attack the Macedonians in ieai, but before such a move it was not fair for Egyptian sailors to attack Macedonians on land The Lacedaemonians were eager to make the venture, both because of then friendship for Athens and also because they were ambitious to hand down to posterity a famous achievement, but as their supplies were exhausted Areus led his army back home, thinking that desperate measures should be reserved for one's own advantage and not usked tecklessly for the benefit of others After they had held out as long as they could, Antigonus made peace with the Athenians, on condition that he brought a gairison into the Museum to be a guard over them a time Antigonus himself removed the garrison from Athens of his own accord, while Areus begat Acrotatus, and Acrotatus Areus, who died of disease when he was just about eight years old And as the only male representative of the house of Eurysthenes was Leonidas the son of Cleonymus, by this time a very old man, the Lacedaemonians gave him the throne Leonidas, it so happened, had a bitter opponent in Lysander, a descendant of Lysander the son of Austocuitus. This Lysander won over to his side Leonidas' son-in-law Cleombiotus. After gaining his support he brought various charges against Leomdas, in particular that when a boy he had sworn to his father Cleonymus to ruin Sparta So Leonidas ceased to be king and Cleombrotus came to the throne in his stead Now if Leonidas had given way to impulse and retired, like Demaratus the son of Aisston, either to the king of Macedonia or to the Egyptian king, he would have profited nothing even by the Spartans changing their minds But as it was, when the citizens sentenced him to exile, he went to Aicadia, whence not many years later he was recalled by the Lacedaemonians, who made him king again Now how Cleomenes the son of Leonidas performed daring feats of valour, and how after him the Spartans ceased to be ruled by kings, I have already shown in my account of Aratus of Sicyon My narrative also included the manner of his death in Egypt

VII So of the family of Eurysthenes, called the Agiadae, Cleomenes the son of Leonidas was the last king in Sparta I will now relate what I have heard about the other house. Procles the son of Aristodemus called his son Sous, whose son Eurypon they say reached such a pitch of renown that this house, hitherto called the Procleidae, came to be named after him the Eurypontidae The son of Eurypon was Prytams, in whose reign began the enmity of the Lacedaemonians against the Aigives. although even before this quairel they made wai against the Cynunans During the generations immediately succeeding this, while Eunomus the son of Piytanis and Polydectes the son of Eunomus were on the throne, Sparta continued at peace, but Charillus the son of Polydectes devastated the land of the Argives-for he it was who invaded Aigolis-and not many years afterwards, under the leadership of Charillus, took place the campaign of the Spartans against Tegea, when luied on by a deceptive oracle the Lacedaemonians hoped to capture the city and to annex the Tegean plain from Arcadia

After the death of Charillus, Nicander his son succeeded to the throne, in whose reign the Messenians muidered, in the sanctuary of the Lady of the Lake. Teleclus the king of the other house

Nicander also invaded Argolis with an army, and laid waste the greater part of the land Asinaeans took part in this action with the Lacedaemonians, and shortly after were punished by the Aigives, who inflicted great destruction on their fatherland and drove out the inhabitants Theopompus, the son of Nicander, who ascended the throne after him, I shall have more to say later on, when I come to the history of Messenia While Theopompus was still king in Sparta there also took place the struggle of the Lacedaemonians with the Argives for what is called the Thyreatid district Theopompus personally took no part in the affair. chiefly because of old age and sonow, for while he was vet alive Aichidamus died Nevertheless Archidamus did not die childless, but left a son Zeuxidamus, whose son Anaxidamus succeeded to In his leigh the Messenians were the thione expelled from the Peloponnesus, being vanquished for the second time by the Spartans Anaxidamus begat Aichidamus, and Aichidamus begat Agesicles It was the lot of both of these to pass all then lives in peace, undisturbed by any wais

Anston, son of Agesicles, marifed a wife who, they say, was the ugliest maiden in Sparta, but became the most beautiful of her women, because Helen changed her seven months only after his marriage with her Ariston had born to him a son, Demaratus. As he was sitting in council with the ephors there came to him a servant with the news that a child was born to him. Ariston, forgetting utmost of his power tried to keep the truce between them unbroken. It was Sthenelaidas, an influential Spartan who was an ephor at the time, who was chiefly responsible for the war. Greece, that still stood firm, was shaken to its foundations by this war, and afterwards, when the structure had given way and was far from sound, was finally overthrown by Philip the son of Amyntas

VIII Archidamus left sons when he died, of whom Agis was the elder and inherited the throne instead of Agesilaus Archidamus had also a daughtei, whose name was Cynisca; she was exceedingly ambitious to succeed at the Olympic games, and was the first woman to breed horses and the first to win an Olympic victory After Cynisca other women, especially women of Lacedaemon, have won Olympic victories, but none of them was more distinguished for their victories than she The Spartans seem to me to be of all men the least moved by poetry and the plaise of poets For with the exception of the epigiam upon Cynisca, of uncertain authorship, and the still earlier one upon Pausanias that Simonides wrote on the tripod dedicated at Delphi, there is no poetic composition to commemorate the doings of the royal houses of the Lacedaemonians

In the reign of Agis the son of Aichidamus the Lacedaemonians had several givenances against the people of Elis, being especially exasperated because they were debaired from the Olympic games and the sanctuary at Olympia So they dispatched a herald commanding the people of Elis to grant home-rule to Lepreum and to any other of their neighbours 1 that were subject to them The people of Elis replied that, when they saw the cities free that were neighbours 1 of Sparta, they would without delay set free then own subjects, whereupon the Lacedaemonians under king Agis invaded the territory of Elis On this occasion there occurred an earthquake, and the army retired home after advancing as fai as Olympia and the Alpheus; but in the next year Agis devastated the country and carried off most of the booty Xenias, a man of Elis who was a personal friend of Agis and the statefriend 2 of the Lacedaemonians, rose up with the 11ch citizens against the people, but before Agis and his army could come to their aid, Thrasydaeus, who at this time championed the interests of the popular party at Elis, overthrew in battle Xenias and his followers and cast them out of the city. When Agis led back his army, he left behind Lysistratus, a Spartan, with a portion of his forces, along with the Elean refugees, that they might help the Lepleans to lavage the land In the third year of 398 r c the war the Lacedaemonians under Agis again prepared to invade the territory of Elis So Thrasydaeus and the Eleans, reduced to due extremities, agreed to forgo their supremacy over their neighbours, to dismantle the fortifications of their city, and to allow the Lacedaemonians to sacrifice to the god and to compete in the games at Olympia used also to make continual incursions into Attica, and established the fortified post at Decelea to 413 B c annov the Athenians When the Athenian navy was destroyed at Aegospotami, Lysander, the son 405BC. of Austocutus, and Agis violated the oaths which the Lacedaemonians as a state had swoin by the gods to the Athenians, and it was on their own initiative, and without the approval of the Spartan state, that they put before their allies the proposal to destroy Athens root and branch Such were the most remarkable military achievements of Agis iash iemaik that Aiiston made about Demaratus was also made by Agis about his son Leotychides, at the suggestion of some evil spirit he said in the hearing of the ephois that he did not beheve Leotychides to be his son Yet Agis, too, repented afterwards, he was at the time being carried home sick from Arcadia, and when he reached Heraea, he not only called the people to witness that he sincerely believed Leotychides to be his very own son, but also with prayers and tears charged them to take the tidings to the Lacedaemonians

After the death of Agis, Agesilaus tiled to keep Leotychides from the throne, lecalling to the minds of the Lacedaemonians what Agis once said about Leotychides. But the Arcadians from Helaea arrived and bole witness for Leotychides, stating what they had heald the dying Agis say. Yet further fuel for the controversy between Agesilaus and Leotychides was supplied by the oracle that was delivered at Delphi to this effect.—

"Sparta beware! though haughty, pay heed to the waining I give thee

Never let the sound limbs give both to a kingdom that lame is Too long then shalt thou he in the clutches of desperate hardships.

Turmoil of war shall arise, o'erwhelming men in its billows "

Leotychides on this occasion said that these words pointed to Agesilaus, who was lame in one of his feet, while Agesilaus interpreted them as alluding to the illegitimacy of Leotychides Although they might have done so, the Lacedaemonians did not refer the disputed point to Delphi, the reason was in my opinion that Lysander, the son of Austociitus, an active supporter of Agesilaus, would have him king at all costs

IX So Agesilaus, son of Aichidamus, became king, and the Lacedaemonians resolved to cross 298 BC with a fleet to Asia in order to put down Artaxerves, son of Daleius For they were informed by several of their magistrates, especially by Lysander, that it was not Artaxerxes but Cyrus who had been supplying the pay for the fleet during the war with Athens Agesilaus, who was appointed to lead the expedition across to Asia and to be in command of the land forces, sent round to all parts of the Peloponnesus, except Aigos, and to the Greeks north of the Isthmus, asking for allies Now the Counthians were most eager to take part in the expedition to Asia, but considering it a bad omen that their temple of Zeus surnamed Olympian had been suddenly buint down, they reluctantly remained behind

The Athenians excused themselves on the ground that their city was retuining to its former state of prosperity after the Peloponnesian war and the epidemic of plague, and the news brought by messengers, that Conon, son of Timotheus, had gone up to the Peisian king, strongly confirmed them in then policy of mactivity. The envoy dispatched to Thebes was Austomelidas, the father of the mother of Agesilaus, a close friend of the Thebans who, when the wall of Plataea had been taken, had been one of the judges voting that the remnant of the garnson should be put to death Now the Thebans like the Athenians refused, saying that they would give no help. When Agesilaus had assembled his Lacedaemonian forces and those of the allies, and at the same time the fleet was ready. he went to Aulis to sacrifice to Artemis, because Agamemnon too had propitiated the goddess here before leading the expedition to Troy Agesilaus, then, claimed to be king of a more prosperous city than was Agamemnon, and to be like him overload of all Greece, and that it would be a more glorious success to conquer Artaxerves and acquire the riches of Persia than to destroy the empire of Priam even as he was sacrificing aimed Thebans came upon him, threw down from the altar the still burning thigh-bones of the victims, and drove him from the sanctuary. Though vexed that the sacrifice was not completed, Agesilaus nevertheless crossed into Asia and launched an attack against Saides, for Lydia at this period was the most important district of lower Asia, and Saides, pie-eminent for its wealth and resources, had been assigned as a residence to the satiap of the coast region, just as Susa had been to the king himself A battle was fought on the plain of the Heimus with Tissaphernes, satian of the parts around Ionia, in which Agesilaus conquered the caralry of the Persians and the infantiv, of which the muster on this occasion had been surpassed only in the expedition of Xeixes and in the earlier ones of Dareius against the Scythians and against Athens The Lacedaemonians, admiring the energy of Agesilaus, added to his command the control of the fleet But Agesilaus made his brother-in-law, Persander, admiral, and devoted himself to carrying on the war vigorously by land The jealousy of some derty prevented him from bringing his plans to their conclusion For when Artaxerxes heard of the victories won by Agesilaus, and how, by attending to the task that lav before him, he advanced with his aimy even further and further, he put Tissaphernes to death in spite of his pievious services, and sent down to the sea Tithraustes, a clever schemer who had some grudge against the Lacedaemonians On his airival at Sardes he at once thought out a plan by which to force the Lacedaemonians to recall their army from Asia He sent Timocrates, a Rhodian, to Greece with money, instructing him to stir up in Greece a war against the Lacedaemonians Those who shared in this money are said to have been the Aigives Cylon and Sodamas, the Thebans Androcleides, Ismenias and Amphithemis, the Athenians Cephalus and Epiciates, with the Counthians who had Aigive sympathies, Polvanthes and Timolaus But those who first openly started the war were the Locrians from Amphissa For there happened to be a piece of land the ownership of which was a matter of dispute between the Locians and the Phocians Egged on by Ismenias and his party at Thebes, the Locrians cut the tipe corn in this land and drove off the booty The Phocians on their side invaded Lociis with all their forces, and laid waste the land. So the Lociians brought in the Thebans as allies, and devastated Phocis Going to Lacedaemon the Phocians inveighed against the Thebans, and set forth what they had suffered at their hands Lacedaemonians determined to make war against Thebes, chief among their givevances being the outrageous way the Thebans behaved towards Agesilaus when he was sacrificing at Aulis. The Athenians receiving early intimation of the Lacedaemonians' intentions, sent to Sparta begging them to submit their givevances to a court of arbitiation instead of appealing to aims, but the Lacedaemonians dismissed the envoys in anger The sequel, how the Lacedaemonians set forth and how Lysander died, I have already described in my account of Pausamas 1 And what was called the Counthian war, which continually became more 391-257 serious, had its origin in the expedition of the Lacedaemonians into Boeotia So these cucumstances compelled Agesilaus to lead his aimy back from Asia Crossing with his fleet from Abydos to Sestos he passed through Thrace as far as Thessaly, where the Thessalians, to please the Thebans, tried to prevent his further progress, there was also an old friendship between them and Athens. But Agesilaus put the Thessalian cavalry to flight and passed through Thessalv, and again made his way through Boeotia, winning a victory over Thebes and the allies at Coronea the Boeotians were put to flight, certain of them took refuge in the sanctuary of Athena surnamed Itoma Agesilaus, although suffering from a wound received in the battle, did not sin against the

X Not long afterwards the Counthrans in exile for pro-Spartan sympathies held the Isthmian games The Counthians in the city made no move at the time, through their fear of Agesilaus, but when he marched to Sparta, they too celebrated the Isthman games along with the Aigives Agesilaus again marched with an aimy against Counth, and, as the festival Hyacinthia was at hand, he gave the Amycleans leave to go back home and perform the traditional lites in honour of Apollo and Hyacinthus This battalion was attacked on the way and annihilated by the Athenians under Iphiciates Agesilaus 200 BC went also to Aetolia to give assistance to the Aetolians, who were hard pressed in a war with the Acamamans, these he compelled to put an end to the war, although they had come very near capturing Call don and the other towns of the Aetolians Afterwards he sailed to Egypt, to succour the Egyptians who had revolted from the king of Persia Agesilaus performed many noteworthy achievements in Egypt, but, being by this time an old man, he died on the march When his dead body was brought home, the Lacedaemonians buried it with greater honours than they had given to any other king

In the reign of Archidamus, son of Agesilaus, the Phocians seized the sanctuary at Delphi. To 306 be help in a war with Thebes the Phocians hired with its wealth independent mercenaires, but they were also aided publicly by the Lacedaemonians and Athenians, the latter calling to mind some old service rendered by the Phocians, the former, too. pretending to be friends when their real reason was, I think, hatred of the Thebans Theopompus, son of Damasistiatus, said that Aichidamus himself had a share of the Delphic money, and further that Deinicha the wife of Aichidamus, receiving a biibe from the chief men of the Phocians, made Archidamus more ready to bring them reinforcements To accept sacred money and to help men who had pillaged the most famous of oracles I do not hold praiseworthy, but the following incident does redound to his plaise. The Phocians were contemplating the cruel course of killing the Delphians of vigorous age, enslaving the women and children, and levelling the city itself to the ground, it was due to the intercession of Archidamus that they escaped this fate at the hands of the Phocians Archidamus afterwards also crossed over into Italy to help the Taientines to wage war against their foreign neighbours Here he was killed by the foreigners, and his corpse missed burnal owing to the anger of Apollo Agis, the elder son of this Archidamus, met his death fighting against Antipater and the Macedonians, but while the younger son, Eudamidas, was king, the Lacedaemonians enjoyed peace The history of Agis, son of Eudamidas, and of Eurydamidas, son of Agis, my account of Sievon has already set forth.

On the way from the Hermae the whole of the region is full of oak-trees. The name of the district. Scotitas (Dark), is not due to the unbroken woods but to Zeus surnamed Scotitas, and there is a sanctuary of Zeus Scotitas on the left of the road and about ten stades from it If you go back from the sanctuary to the road, advance a little and then turn again to the left, you come to an image of Heracles and a trophy, which I was told Heracles raised after killing Hippocoon and his sons third branch from the straight road is on the right, and leads to Carvae (Walnut-trees) and to the sanctuary of Artemis For Carvae is a region sacred to Artemis and the nymphs, and here stands in the open an image of Artemis Carvatis Heie every vear the Lacedaemonian maidens hold chorus-dances, and they have a traditional native dance turning, as you go along the highway, you come to the ruins of Sellasia The people of this city, as I have stated already, were sold into slavery by the 222 BC Achaeans after they had conquered in battle the Lacedaemonians under their king Cleomenes, the son of Leonidas In Thomas, which you will reach as you go along, is an image of Apollo Pythaeus, made after the style of the one at Amyclae, the fashion of it I will describe when I come to speak of the latter For in the eyes of the Lacedaemonians the cult of the Amyclaean is the more distinguished, so that they spent on adorning the image in Amyclae even the gold which Croesus the Lydian sent for Apollo 560-516 Pythaeus.

LACONIA, XI. 1-3

XI Farther on from Thomas is the city, which was originally named Sparta, but in course of time came to be called Lacedaemon as well, a name which till then belonged to the land. To prevent misconception, I added in my account of Attica that I had not mentioned everything in order, but had made a selection of what was most noteworthy. This I will repeat before beginning my account of Sparta, for from the beginning the plan of my work has been to discard the many trivial stories current among the several communities, and to pick out the things most worthy of mention—an excellent rule which I will never violate.

The Lacedaemonians who live in Sparta have a market-place worth seeing, the council-chamber of the senate, and the offices of the ephois, of the guardians of the laws, and of those called the Bidiaeans, are all in the market-place The senate is the council which has the supreme control of the Lacedaemonian constitution, the other officials form the executive Both the ephors and the Bidiaeans are five in number; it is customary for the latter to hold competitions for the lads, particularly the one at the place called Platanistas (Plane-tree Grove), while the ephors transact the most serious business, one of them giving his name to the year, just as at Athens this privilege belongs to one of those called the Nine Aichons The most striking feature in the market-place is the portico which they call Persian because it was made from spoils taken in the Persian wars. In course of time they have altered it until it is as large and as splendid as it is On the pillars are white-marble figures of Persians, including Mardonius, son of Gobryas

There is also a figure of Artemisia, daughter of Lygdamis and queen of Halicainassus It is said that this lady voluntarily joined the expedition of Xeixes against Greece and distinguished herself at the naval engagement off Salamis On the marketplace are temples, there is one of Caesar, the first Roman to covet monarchy and the first emperor under the present constitution, and also one to his son Augustus, who put the empire on a firmer footing, and became a more famous and a more powerful His name "Augustus" means man than his father in Greek sebastos (reverend).

At the altar of Augustus they show a bionze statue of Agias This Agias, they say, by divining for Lysander captured the Atheman fleet at Aegos- 415 BC potami with the exception of ten ships of wai These made their escape to Cyprus; all the rest the Lacedaemonians captured along with their crews Agias was a son of Agelochus, a son of Tisamenus Tisamenus belonged to the family of the Iamidae at Elis, and an oracle was given to him that he should win five most famous contests. So he trained for the pentathlon at Olympia, but came away de-And yet he was first in two events, beating Hieronymus of Andros in running and in jumping But when he lost the wrestling bout to this competitor, and so missed the prize, he understood what the oracle meant, that the god granted him to win five contests in wai by his divinations Lacedaemonians, hearing of the oracle the Pythian priestess had given to Tisamenus, persuaded him to migrate from Elis and to be state-diviner at Sparta

And Tisamenus won them five contests in war The 479 BC. first was at Plataea against the Persians, the second was at Tegea, when the Lacedaemonians had engaged the Tegeans and Aigives; the third was at Dipaea, an Aicadian town in Maenalia, when all the Arcadians except the Mantineans were arraved against them His fourth contest was against the Helots who had rebelled and left the Isthmus for 464 BC Ithome Not all the Helots revolted, only the Messenian element, which separated itself from the old Helots These events I shall relate presently On the occasion I mention the Lacedaemonians allowed the rebels to depart under a truce, in accordance with the advice of Tisamenus and of the oracle at Delphi The last time Tisamenus divined for them was at Tanagra, an 457 BC engagement taking place with the Aigives and Athenians

Such I learned was the history of Tisamenus their market-place the Spartans have images of Apollo Pythaeus, of Artemis and of Leto whole of this region is called Choros (Dancing), because at the Gymnopaediae, a festival which the Lacedaemonians take more seriously than any other, the lads perform dances in honour of Apollo Not far from them is a sanctuary of Earth and of Zeus of the Market-place, another of Athena of the Market-place and of Poseidon suinamed Securer, and likewise one of Apollo and of Hera also dedicated a colossal statue of the Spartan People The Lacedaemonians have also a sanctuary of the Fates, by which is the grave of Orestes, son of Agamemnon For when the bones of Orestes were brought from Tegea in accordance with an oracle they were buried here—Beside the grave of Orestes is a statue of Polydorus, son of Alcamenes, a king who rose to such honour that the magistrates seal with his likeness everything that requires sealing—There is also Heimes of the Market-place carrying Dionysus as a child, besides the old Courts of the Ephois, as they are called, in which are the tombs of Epimenides the Cretan and of Aphareus the son of Perieres—As to Epimenides, I think the Lacedaemonian story is more probable than the Argive—Here, where the Fates are, the Lacedaemonians also have a sanctuary of Hestia—There is also Zeus Hospitable and Athene Hospitable

XII As you go from the market-place by the road they name the Aphetaid Road, you come to the so-called Booneta 1 But my narrative must first explain why the road has this name It is said that Icanus proposed a foot-race for the wooers of Penelope, that Odysseus won is plain, but they say that the competitors were let go (aphethener) for the race along the Aphetaid Road In my opinion, Icanus was imitating Danaus when he held the lunning-race For Danaus continued the following plan to solve the difficulty about his daughters Nobody would take a wife from among them because of their pollution, so Danaus sent found a notice that he would give away his daughters without bride-gifts, and that each suitor could choose the one whose beauty pleased him most A few men came, among whom he held a foot-race, the first comer was allowed to choose before all the others, after him the second, and so on to the last daughters that were left had to wait until other suitors arrived and competed in another foot-race. On this road the Lacedaemonians have, as I have already said, what is called the Booneta, which once was the house of their king Polydorus. When he died, they bought it from his widow, paying the price in oven. For at that time there was as yet neither silver nor gold comage, but they still bartered in the old way with oven, slaves, and uncomed silver and gold. Those who sail to India say that the natives give other merchandise in exchange for Greek cargoes, knowing nothing about comage, and that though they have plenty of gold and of bronze.

On the opposite side of the office of the Bidiaeans is a sanctuary of Athena. Odysseus is said to have set up the image and to have named it Keleuthea (Lady of the Road), when he had beaten the suitors of Penelope in the foot-race Of Keleuthea he set up sanctuaries, three in number, at some distance from each other Faither along the Aphetaid Road are hero-shrines, of Ions, who is supposed to have been boin in the time of Lelev or Myles, and of Amphiaiaus the son of Oicles The last they think was made by the sons of Tyndaieus, for that Amphiaiaus was There is a hero-shrine of Lelex himtheir cousin self Not far from these is a precinct of Poseidon of Taenarum, which is the suiname given him, and near by an image of Athena, which is said to have been dedicated by the colonists who left for Tarentum in Italy As to the place they call the Hellenium, it has been stated that those of the Greeks who were preparing to repel Xerves when he was crossing into Europe deliberated at this place how they should resist. The other story is that those claeans, as well as the other Achaeans, who at that time occupied Laconia. The sanctuary of the Great Mother has paid to it the most extraordinary honours After it come the hero-shrines of Hippolytus, son of Theseus, and of the Arcadian Aulon, son of Tlesi-Some say that Tlesimenes was a brother, others a son of Parthenopaeus, son of Melanion

Leading from the market-place is another road, on which they have built what is called Scias (Canopy), where even at the present day they hold their meetings of the Assembly This Canopy was made, they say, by Theodorus of Samos, who dis- 1 c 540 covered the melting of iron and the moulding of images from it Here the Lacedaemonians hung the haip of Timotheus of Miletus, to express their disapproval of his innovation in haiping, the addition of four strings to the seven old ones Canopy is a circular building, and in it images of Zeus and Aphrodite surnamed Olympian they say, was set up by Epimenides, but their account of him does not agree with that of the Argives, for the Lacedaemonians deny that they ever fought with the Cnossians XIII Hard by is the grave of Cynoitas son of Amyclas, together with the tomb of Castoi, and over the tomb there has also been made a sanctuary, for they say that it was not before the fortieth year after the fight with Idas and Lynceus that divine honours were paid to the sons of Tyndaieus By the Canopy is also shown the grave of Idas and Lynceus it fits in best with their history to hold that they were builed not here but in Messenia disasters of the Messenians, and the length of their exile from the Peloponnesus, even after their return

whapped in darkness much of their ancient history, and their ignorance makes it easy for any who wish to dispute a claim with them

Opposite the Olympian Aphiodite the Lacedaemonians have a temple of the Savioui Maid. Some say that it was made by Oipheus the Thracian, others by Abans when he had come from the Hyperboreans Carneus, whom they surname "of the House," had honours in Sparta even before the neturn of the Henacleidae, his seat being in the house of a seer, Crius (Ram) the son of Theocles. The daughter of this Crius was met as she was filling her pitcher by spies of the Dorians, who entered into conversation with her, visited Crius and learned from him how to capture Sparta cult of Apollo Carneus has been established among all the Dollans ever since Calnus, an Acalnanian by birth, who was a seer of Apollo When he was killed by Hippotes the son of Phylas, the wrath of Apollo fell upon the camp of the Donans, Hippotes went into banishment because of the bloodguilt, and from this time the custom was established among the Dollans of propitiating the Acainanian seer But this Cainus is not the Lacedaemonian Carneus of the House, who was worshipped in the house of Cius the seer while the Achaeans were still in possession of Sparta The poetess Praxilla represents Carneus as the son of Europa, Apollo and Leto being his nuises There is also another account of the name, in Tiojan Ida there grew in a grove of Apollo cornel-trees, which the Greeks cut down to make the Wooden Horse Learning that the god was wroth with them they propitiated him with sacrifices and named Apollo Carneus from the cornel-

Not far from Caineus is what is called the image of Aphetaeus Here they say was the starting-place of the race run by the surtors of Penelope is a place having its porticoes in the form of a square, where of old stuff used to be sold to the people By this is an altai of Zeus Counsellor and of Athena Counsellor, also of the Dioscuir, likewise surnamed Counsellors Opposite is what is called the Knoll, with a temple of Dionysus of the Knoll, by which is a precinct of the hero who they say guided Dionysus on the way to Sparta To this hero sacrifices are offered before they are offered to the god by the daughters of Dionysus and the daughters of Leucippus For the other eleven ladies who are named daughters of Dionysus there is held a footrace, this custom came to Sparta from Delphi Not far from the Dionysus is a sanctuary of Zeus of Fan Wind, on the right of which is a hero-shime The sons of Tyndareus were descended on their mother's side from Pleuron, for Asius in his poem says that Thestius the father of Leda was the son of Agenor the son of Pleuron Not far from the hero-shime is a hill, and on the hill a temple of Argive Hera, set up, they say, by Eurydice, the daughter of Lacedaemon and the wife of Acrisius the son of Abas. An oracular utterance caused to be built a sanctuary of Hera Hyperchemia (she whose hand is above) at a time when the Eurotas was flooding a great part of the land An old wooden image they call that of Aphrodite Hera A mother is wont to sacrifice to the goddess when a daughter is mairied. On the road to the right of the hill is a

On returning to the lounge you see a sanctuary of Artemis Issoria They surname her also Lady of the Lake, though she is not really Artemis but Butomaitis of Ciete I deal with her in my account of Aegina Very near to the tombs which have been built for the Agiadae you will see a slab, on which are written the victories in the foot-race won, at Olympia and elsewhere, by Chionis. a Lacedaemonian The Olympian victories were f c, 664 seven, four in the single-stade i race and three in the double-stade 1 race The race with the shield, that takes place at the end of the contest, was not at that time one of the events It is said that Chionis also took part in the expedition of Battus of Thera, helped him to found Cyrene and to reduce the neighbouring Libyans The sanctuary of Thetis was set up, they say, for the following reason The Lacedaemonians were making war against the Messenians, who had revolted, and their king Anavander, having invaded Messenia, took prisoners certain women, and among them Cleo, priestess of Thetis This Cleo the wife of Anaxander asked for from her husband, and discovering that she had the wooden image of Thetis, she set up with her a temple for the goddess This Leandris did because of a vision in a dream, but the wooden image of Thetis is guarded in secret The cult of Demeter Chthonia (of the Loner World) the Lacedaemonians say was handed on to them by Orpheus, but in my opinion it was because of the sanctuary in Hermione 2 that the Lacedaemonians also began to worship Demeter Chthonia The Spartans have also a sanctuary of Serapis, the newest sanctuary in the city, and one of Zeus surnamed Olympian

Course to the place where it is the custom for the young men even down to the present day to practise As you go to this Course from the grave of the Agnadae, you see on the left the tomb of Eumedes—this Eumedes was one of the children of Hippocoon-and also an old image of Heiacles, to whom sacrifice is paid by the Sphaereis are those who are just passing from youth to man-In the Course are two gymnastic schools, one being a votive gift of Eurycles, a Spartan side the Course, over against the image of Heracles, there is a house belonging now to a private individual, but in olden times to Menelaus away from the Course are sanctuaries of the Dioscuri, of the Graces, of Eileithyia, of Apollo Carneus, and of Artemis Leader The sanctuary of Agnitas has been made on the right of the Course; Agnitas is a surname of Asclepius, because the god had a wooden image of agnus castus The agnus is a willow like the thoin Not far from Asclepius stands a trophy, raised, they say, by Polydeuces to celebrate his victory over Lynceus This is one of the pieces of evidence that confirm my statement that the sons of Aphareus were not buried in Sparta At the beginning of the Course are the Dioscuri Starters, and a little farther on a hero-shrine of Alcon, who they say was a son of Hippocoon

Beside the shime of Alcon is a sanctuary of Poseidon, whom they surname "of the House" And there is a place called Platanistas (Plane-tree Grove) from the unbrokening of tall plane trees growing round it. The place itself, where it is customary for the youths to fight, is surrounded by a moat just like an island in the sea, you enter it by bridges.

On each of the two bidges stand images; on one side an image of Heiacles, on the other a likeness of Lycurgus. Among the laws Lycurgus laid down for the constitution are those regulating the fighting of the youths There are other acts performed by the youths, which I will now describe Before the fighting they sacrifice in the Phoebaeum, which is outside the city, not fai distant from Therapne Here each company of youths sacrifices a puppy to Envalues, holding that the most valuant of tame animals is an acceptable victim to the most valiant of the gods I know of no other Greeks who are accustomed to sacrifice pupples except the people of Colophon, these too sacrifice a puppy, a black bitch, to the Wayside Goddess Both the sacrifice of the Colophonians and that of the youths at Sparta are appointed to take place at night. At the sacrifice the youths set trained boars to fight; the company whose boar happens to win generally gains the victory in Plane-tree Grove Such are the performances in the Phoebaeum A little before the middle of the next day they enter by the bridges into the place I have mentioned They cast lots during the night to decide by which entiance each band is to In fighting they use their hands, kick with their feet, bite, and gouge out the eyes of their opponents Man to man they fight in the way I have described, but in the mellay they charge violently and push one another into the water

XV At Plane-tiee Grove there is also a hero-shine of Cynisca, daughter of Aichidamus king of the Spartans. She was the first woman to breed horses, and the first to win a chariot race at Olympia Behind the portico built by the side of Plane-tiee Grove are other hero-shrines, of Alcimus, of Enaraephorus, at a little distance away one of Dorceus, and close to it one of Sebrus. These are said to be sons of Hippocoon The fountain near the heroshrine of Dorceus they call Dorcean after him, the place Sebium is named after Sebius On the right of Sebrium is the tomb of Alcman, the lyinc poet, the chaim of whose works was not in the least spoilt by the Laconian dialect, which is the least musical of them all There are sanctuaries of Helen and of Heracles, the former is near the grave of Alcman, the latter is quite close to the wall and contains an aimed image of Heiacles The attitude of the image is due, they say, to the fight with Hippocoon and his sons The enmity of Heracles towards the family of Hippocoon is said to have spring out of their refusing to cleanse him when he came to Sparta for cleansing after the death of Iphitus The following incident, too, helped to begin the feud a stripling cousin of Heiacles—he was the son of Licymnius the brother of Alemene-came to Sparta along with Heracles, and went found to view the city When he came to the house of Hippocoon, a house-dog attacked him Oeonus happened to throw a stone which knocked over the dog the sons of Hippocoon ran out, and dispatched Oconus with their clubs This made Heracles most bitterly wroth with Hippocoon and his sons, and straightway, angry as he was, he set out to give them battle. On this occasion he was wounded, and made good his retreat by stealth; but afterwards he made an expedition against Sparta and succeeded in avenging himself on Hippocoon, and also on the sons of Hippocoon for their murder of Oeonus. The tomb of Oeonus is built by the side of the sanctuary of Heracles.

As you go from the Course towards the east, there is a path on the right, with a sanctuary of Athena called Axiopoinos (Just Regular or Tit for Tat) when Heracles, in avenging himself on Hippocoon and his sons, had inflicted upon them a just requital for their treatment of his relative, he founded a sanctuary of Athena, and surnamed her Axiopoinos because the ancients used to call vengeance points. There is another sanctuary of Athena on another road from the Course It was dedicated, they say, by Theras son of Autesion son of Tisamenus son of Thersander, when he was leading a colony to the island now called Thera after him, the name of which in ancient times was Calliste (Fanest). Near is a temple of Hipposthenes, who won so many victories in wiestling They worship Hipposthenes in accordance with an oracle, paying him honouis as to Poseidon Opposite this temple is an old image of Enyalius in fetters The idea the Lacedaemonians express by this image is the same as the Athenians express by their Wingless Victory, the former think that Envalues will never run away from them, being bound in the fetters, while the Athenians think that Victory, having no wings, will always remain where she is

In this fashion, and with such a belief, have these cities set up the wooden images. In Sparta is a lounge called Painted, and by it hero-shrines of Cadmus the son of Agenoi, and of his descendants Oeolycus, son of Theras, and Aegeus, son of Oeolycus. They are said to have been made by Maesis, Laeas and Europas, sons of Hyraeus, son of Aegeus. They made for Amphilochus too his heroshine, because their ancestor Tisamenus had for his mother Demonassa, the sister of Amphilochus.

The Lacedaemonians are the only Greeks who surname Hera Goat-eater, and sacrifice goats to the goddess They say that Heracles founded the sanctuary and was the first to sacrifice goats, because in his fight against Hippocoon and his children he met with no hindiance from Heia, although in his other adventures he thought that the goddess opposed He sacrificed goats, they say, because he lacked other kinds of victims. Not far from the theatre is a sanctuary of Poseidon God of Kin, and there are hero-shrines of Cleodaeus, son of Hyllus, and of Oebalus The most famous of then sanctuaries of Asclepius has been built near Booneta, and on the left is the heio-shime of Teleclus mention him again later in my history of Messenia 1 A little farther on is a small hill, on which is an ancient temple with a wooden image of Aphrodite This is the only temple I know that has an upper storey built upon it. It is a sanctuary of Morpho, a surname of Aphrodite, who sits wearing a veil and with fetters on her feet. The story is that the fetters were put on her by Tyndareus, who symbolized by the bonds the faithfulness of wives to their husbands. The other account, that Tyndareus punished the goddess with fetters because he thought that from Aphrodite had come the shame of his daughters, I will not admit for a moment. For it were surely altogether silly to expect to punish the goddess by making a cedar

XVI Near is a sanctuary of Hilaena and of Phoebe The author of the poem Cypria calls them daughters of Apollo Then priestesses are young maidens, called, as are also the goddesses, Leucippides (Daughters of Leucippus) 1 One of the images was adoined by a Leucippis who had served the goddesses as a priestess. She gave it a face of modern workmanship instead of the old one, she was forbidden by a dream to adorn the other one as well. Here there has been hung from the roof an egg tied to libands, and they say that it is the famous egg that legend says Leda brought forth Each year the women weave a tunic for the Apollo at Amyclae, and they call Tunic the chamber in which they do then weaving Near it is built a house, said to have been occupied originally by the sons of Tyndareus, but afterwards it was acquired by Phormion, a Spartan To him came the Dioscuri in the likeness of strangers They said that they had come from Cyrene, and asked to lodge with him, requesting to have the chamber which had pleased them most when they dwelt among men He replied that they might lodge in any other part of the house they wished, but that they could not have the chamber For it so happened that his maiden daughter was her girlish apparel had disappeared, and in the room were found images of the Dioscuii, a table, and silphium upon it

Such is the story As you go from the Tunic in the direction of the gate there is a hero-shrine of Cheilon, who is considered one of the Seven Sages, and also of Athenodorus, one of those who with Doneus the son of Anaxandrides set out for Sicily. The reason of their setting out was that they held that the Erycine district belonged to the descendants of Heracles and not to the foreigners who held it. The story is that Heracles wrestled with Ervy on these terms. if Heracles won, the land of Erva was to belong to him, but if he were beaten, Ervy was to depart with the cows of Geryon, for Heracles at the time was driving these away, and when they swam across to Sicily he too crossed over in search of them near the bent olive-tree The favour of heaven was more partial to Heracles than it was afterwards to Doneus the son of Anaxandrides, Heracles killed Ervy, but Dorieus himself and the greater part of his aimy were destroyed by the Egestaeans

The Lacedaemonians have also made a sanctuary for Lycuigus, who diew up the laws, looking upon him as a god. Behind the temple is the grave of Eucosmus, the son of Lycuigus, and by the altar the grave of Lathiia and Anaxandia. Now these were themselves twins, and therefore the sons of Aristodemus, who also were twins likewise, took them to wife, they were daughters of Thersander son of Agamedidas, king of the Cleonaeans and great-grandson of Ctesippus, son of Heiacles. Opposite the temple is the tomb of Theopompus son of Nicander, and also that of Eurybiades, who commanded the Lacedaemonian warships that fought the Peisians at Aitemisium and Salamis Near is what is called the heio-shrine of Astrabacus

The place named Limnaeum (Marshy) is sacied to Artemis Orthia (Upright) The wooden image there they say is that which once Oiestes and Iphigenia stole out of the Tauric land, and the Lacedaemonians say that it was brought to their land because there also Orestes was king then story more probable than that of the Athenians. For what could have induced Iphigenia to leave the image behind at Biauion; Or why did the Athenians, when they were preparing to abandon their land, fail to include this image in what they put on board their ships? And vet, night down to the present day, the fame of the Tauric goddess has remained so high that the Cappadocians dwelling on the Euxine claim that the image is among them, a like claim being made by those Lydians also who have a sanctuary of Artemis Anaertis But the Athenians, we are asked to believe, made light of it becoming booty of the Persians For the image at Brauion was brought to Susa, and afterwards Seleucus gave it to the Syrians of Laodicea, who still possess it I will give other evidence that the Orthra in Lacedaemon is the wooden image from the foreigners Firstly, Astrabacus and Alopecus, sons of Irbus, son of Amphisthenes, son of Amphicles, son of Agis, when they found the image straightway became insane Secondly, the Spartan Limnatians, the Cynosumans, and the people of Mesoa and Pitane. while sacrificing to Aitemis, fell to quarreling, which led also to bloodshed, many were killed at the altar and the rest died of disease Whereat an oracle was delivered to them, that they should stain the altar with human blood He used to be sacrificed upon whomsoever the lot fell, but Lycurgus changed the custom to a scourging of the lads, and so in this way the altar is stained with human blood By them stands the pilestess, holding the wooden image Now it is small and light, but if ever the scourgeis spare the lash because of a lad's beauty or high rank, then at once the priestess finds the image grow so heavy that she can hardly carry it She lays the blame on the scourgers, and says that it is then fault that she is being weighed down So the image ever since the sacrifices in the Tauric land keeps its fondness for human blood They call it not only Orthia, but also Lygodesma (Willow-bound), because it was found in a thicket of willows, and the encircling willow made the image stand upright XVII. Not far from the Orthia is a sanctuary of Eileithyia They say that they built it, and came to worship Eileithyia as a goddess, because of an oracle from Delphi.

The Lacedaemonians have no citadel rising to a conspicuous height like the Cadmea at Thebes and the Laisa at Argos. There are, however, hills in the city, and the highest of them they call the citadel. Here is built a sanctuary of Athena, who is called both City-protecting and Lady of the Bronze House. The building of the sanctuary was begun, they say, by Tyndaieus. On his death his children were desirous of making a second attempt to complete the building, and the resources they intended to use were the spoils of Aphidna They too left it unfinished, and it was many years afterwards that the Lacedaemonians made of bronze both the temple and the image of Athena The builder was Gitiadas, c 500 a native of Sparta, who also composed Dorian lyrics, including a hymn to the goddess. On the bionze are wrought in relief many of the labours of Heracles and many of the voluntary exploits he successfully carried out, besides the lape of the daughters of Leucippus and other achievements of the sons of Tyndareus There is also Hephaestus releasing his mother from the fetters The legend about this I have already related 1 in my history of Attica There are also represented nymphs bestowing upon Perseus, who is starting on his enterprise against Medusa in Libya, a cap and the shoes by which he was to be carried through the air There are also wrought the bith of Athena, Amphitute, and Poseidon, the largest figures, and those which I thought the best worth seeing There is here another sanctuary of Athena, her surname is the As you go to the south portico there is a temple of Zeus surnamed Cosmetas (Orderer), and before it is the tomb of Tyndaieus The west portico has two eagles, and upon them are two Victories. Lysander dedicated them to commemorate both his exploits, the one was off Ephesus, when he conquered Antiochus, the captain of Alcibiades, and the Atheman warships, and the second occurred later, when he destroyed the Athenian fleet at Aegospotami

On the left of the Lady of the Bronze House they have set up a sanctuary of the Muses, because the Lacedaemonians used to go out to fight, not to the sound of the trumpet, but to the music of the flute and the accompaniment of lyie and harp the Lady of the Bronze House is a temple of Aphrodite Areia (Warlike). The wooden images are as old as any in Greece On the right of the Lady of the Bronze House has been set up an image of Zeus Most High, the oldest image that is made of bronze. It is not wrought in one piece Each of the limbs has been hammered separately; these are fitted together, being prevented from coming apart by nails They say that the artist was Clenchus of Rhegium, who is said by some to have been a pupil of Dipoenus 1 and Scyllis, by others of Daedalus himself By what is called the Scenoma (Tent) there is a statue of a woman, whom the Lacedaemonians say is Euryleonis She won a victory at Olympia with a two-horse chanot.

By the side of the altar of the Lady of the Bronze House stand two statues of Pausanias, the general at Plataea His history, as it is known, I will not relate. The accurate accounts of my predecessors suffice, I shall content myself with adding to them what I heard from a man of Byzantium Pausanias was detected in his treachery, and was the only suppliant of the Lady of the Bronze House who failed to win security, solely because he had been unable to wipe away a defilement of bloodshed. When he was cruising about the Hellespont with the Lacedaemonian and allied fleets, he fell in love with a Byzantine maiden. And straightway at the beginning of night Cleonice -that was the gul's name-was brought by those who had been ordered to do so But Pausanias was asleep at the time and the noise awoke him as she came to him she unintentionally diopped her lighted lamp And Pausanias, conscious of his treason to Greece, and therefore always nervous and fearful, jumped up then and struck the gul with his sword. From this defilement Pausanias could not escape, although he underwent all sorts of purifications and became a suppliant of Zeus Physius (God of Flight), and finally went to the wizards at Phigalia in Aicadia, but he paid a fitting penalty to Cleonice and to the god. The Lacedaemonians, in fulfilment of a command from Delphi, had the bronze images made and honour the spirit Bountiful, saying that it was this Bountiful that turns aside the wiath that the God of Suppliants shows because of Pausanias.

XVIII Near the statues of Pausanias is an image of Aphrodite Ambologeia (Postponer of Old Age), which was set up in accordance with an oracle, there are also images of Sleep and of Death. They think them brothers, in accordance with the verses in the Iliad As you go towards what is called the Alpium is a temple of Athena Ophthalmitis (Goddess of the Eye) They say that Lycurgus dedicated it when one of his eyes had been struck out by Alcander, because the laws he had made happened not to find favour with Alcander Having fled to this place he was saved by the Lacedaemonians from losing his remaining eye, and so he made this temple of Athena Ophthalmitis Faither on from here is a sanctuary of Ammon From the first the Lacedaemonians are known to have used the oracle in Libya more than any other Greeks. It is said also that when Lysander was besieging Aphytis in Pallene Ammon appeared by night and declared that it would be better for him and for Lacedaemon if they ceased from warring against Aphytis. And so Lysander raised the siege, and induced the Lacedaemonians to worship the god still more. The people of Aphytis honour Ammon no less than the Ammonian Libvans

The story of Artemis Chagia is as follows. Cnageus, they say, was a native who joined the Dioscuri in their expedition against Aphidna Being taken pusoner in the battle and sold into Ciete, he lived as a slave where the Cretans had a sanctuary of Artems, but in course of time he ian away in the company of the maiden pilestess, who took the image with her. It is for this reason that they name Artemis Cnagia. But I am of opinion that Cnageus came to Crete in some other way, and not in the manner the Lacedaemonians state, for I do not think there was a battle at Aphidna at all, Thesus being detained among the Thespiotians and the Athenians not being unanimous, their sympathies inclining towards Menestheus Moreover, even if a fight occurred, nobody would believe that prisoners were taken from the conquerors, especially as the victory was overwhelming, so that Aphidna itself was captured.

I must now end my criticisms As you go down to Amyclae from Sparta you come to a river called Tiasa They hold that Tiasa was a daughter of reliefs one by one in detail would have merely bored my readers; but to be brief and concise (for the greater number of them are not unknown either) Poseidon and Zeus are carrying Taygete, daughter of Atlas, and her sister Alcyone There are also reliefs of Atlas, the single combat of Heiacles and Cvcnus, and the battle of the Centaurs at the cave of Pholus I cannot say why Bathycles has represented the so-called Bull of Minos bound, and being led along alive by Theseus There is also on the throne a band of Phaeacian dancers, and Demodocus singing Perseus, too, is represented killing Medusa Passing over the fight of Heracles with the giant Thurius and that of Tyndaieus with Eurytus, we have next the rape of the daughters of Leucippus Dionysus, too, and Heracles, Hermes is bearing the infant Dionysus to heaven, and Athena is taking Heracles to dwell henceforth with the gods is also Peleus handing over Achilles to be reared by Chenon, who is also said to have been his teacher There is Cephalus, too, carried off by Day because of his beauty. The gods are bringing gifts to the mairiage of Harmonia There is wrought also the single combat of Achilles and Memnon, and Heracles avenging himself upon Diomedes the Thracian, and upon Nessus at the river Euenus Heimes is bringing the goddesses to Alexander to be judged. Adrastus and Tydeus are staying the fight between Amphiaraus and Lycurgus the son of Pronax is gazing at Io, the daughter of Inachus, who is already a cow, and Athena is running away from Hephaestus, who chases her Next to these have been wrought two of the exploits of Heracles-his middle, whereon the image stands, being the widest of them. I know of nobody who has measured the height of the image, but at a guess one would estimate it to be as much as thirty cubits. It is not the work of Bathycles, being old and uncouth; for though it has face, feet, and hands, the rest resembles a bionze pillar. On its head it has a helmet, in its hands a spear and a bow pedestal of the statue is fashioned into the shape of an altar, and they say that Hyacinthus is buried in it, and at the Hvacinthia, before the sacrifice to Apollo, they devote offerings to Hyacinthus as to a hero into this altar through a bionze door, which is on the left of the altar. On the altar are wrought in relief, here an image of Biris. there Amphitrite and Poseidon Zeus and Hermes are conversing, near stand Dionysus and Semele, with Ino by her side On the altai are also Demeter, the Maid, Pluto, next to them Fates and Seasons, and with them Aphrodite, Athena and Artemis They are carrying to heaven Hyacinthus and Polyboea, the sister, they say, of Hyacinthus, who died a maid Now this statue of Hyacinthus represents him as bearded, but Nicias, son of # c. 320 Nicomedes, has painted him in the very prime of youthful beauty, hinting at the love of Apollo for Hyacinthus of which legend tells Wrought on the altar is also Heracles, he too is being led to heaven by Athena and the other gods. and Seasons As for the West Wind, how Apollo unintentionally killed Hyacinthus, and the story of the flower, we must be content with the legends, although perhaps they are not true history.

Amyclae was laid waste by the Donans, and since that time has remained a village, I found there a sanctuary and image of Alexandra worth seeing Alexandra is said by the Amyclaeans to be Cassandra, the daughter of Pham Here is also a statue of Clytaemnestra, together with what is supposed to be the tomb of Agamemnon The natives worship the Amyclaean god and Dionysus, surnaming the latter, quite correctly I think, Psilax For psila is Doric for wings, and wine uplifts men and lightens then spirit no less than wings do birds

Such I found were the things worth mentioning about Amyclae Another road from the city leads to Therapne, and on this road is a wooden image of Athena Alea Before the Eurotas is crossed, a little above the bank is shown a sanctuary of Zeus Wealthy. Across the river is a temple of Asclepius Cotyleus (of the Hip-joint), it was made by Heracles, who named Asclepius Cotyleus, because he was cured of the wound in the hip-joint that he received in the former fight with Hippocoon and his sons the objects along this road the oldest is a sanctuary of Ares. This is on the left of the road, and the image is said to have been brought from Colchis by the Dioscuii They surname him Theritas after Thero, who is said to have been the nurse of Ares Perhaps it was from the Colchians that they heard the name Theritas, since the Greeks know of no There, nurse of Ares My own belief is that the surname Theritas 1 was not given to Ares because of his nurse, but because when a man meets an enemy in battle he must cast aside all gentleness, as Homei 2 says of Achilles —

And he is fierce as a lion.

The name of Therapne is derived from the daughter of Leley, and in it is a temple of Menelaus, they say that Menelaus and Helen were The account of the Rhodians is buried here different. They say that when Menelaus was dead, and Orestes still a wanderer, Helen was driven out by Nicostratus and Megapenthes and came to Rhodes, where she had a triend in Polyxo, the wife of Tlepolemus For Polyxo, they sav, was an Argive by descent, and when she was already married to Tlepolemus shared his flight to Rhodes At the time she was queen of the island, having been left with an orphan boy They say that this Polyxo desired to avenge the death of Tlepolemus on Helen, now that she had her in her power sent against her when she was bathing handmaidens dressed up as Furies, who seized Helen and hanged her on a tiee, and for this reason the Rhodians have a sanctuary of Helen of the Tree. A story too I will tell which I know the people of Ciotona tell about Helen The people of Himeia too agree with this account. In the Euxine at the mouths of the Ister is an island sacred to Achilles. It is called White Island, and its circumference is twenty stades It is wooded throughout and abounds in animals, wild and tame, while on it is a temple of Achilles with an image of him The first to sail thither legend says was Leonymus of Ciotona. For when war had arisen between the people of Crotona and the Locii in Italy, the Locii, in viitue of the relationship between them and the Opuntians, called upon Ajax son of Oileus to help them in battle Leonymus the general of the people of Crotona attacked his enemy at that point where he heard that Ajax was posted in the front line Now he was wounded in the breast, and weak with his hurt came to Delphi. When he arrived the Pythian priestess sent Leonymus to White Island, telling him that there Ajax would appear to him and cure In time he was healed and returned his wound from White Island, where, he used to declare, he saw Achilles, as well as Ajax the son of Oileus and Ajax the son of Telamon. With them, he said, were Patroclus and Antilochus. Helen was wedded to Achilles, and had bidden him sail to Stesichorus at Himera, and announce that the loss of his sight was caused by her wrath

XX Therefore Stesichorus composed his recantation. In Therapne I remember seeing the fountain Messers. Some of the Lacedaemonians, however, have declared that of old the name Messers was given, not to the fountain at Therapne, but to the one we call Polydeucea. The fountain Polydeucea and a sanctuary of Polydeuces are on the right of the road to Therapne.

Not far from Therapne is what is called Phoebaeum, in which is a temple of the Dioscuii. Here the youths sacrifice to Envalue At no great distance from it stands a sanctuary of Poseidon suinamed Earth-embracer Going on from here in the direction of Taygetus you come to a place called Alesiae (Piace of Grinding), they say that Myles (Mill-man) the son of Lelex was the first human being to invent a mill, and that he ground corn in this Alesiae Here they have a hero-shrine of Lacedaemon, the son of Taygete Crossing from here a river Phellia, and going past Amyclae along a road leading straight towards the sea, you come to the site of Phans, which was once a city of Laconia Turning away from the Phellia to the night is the road that leads to Mount Taygetus On the plain is a precinct of Zeus Messapeus, who is surnamed, they say, after a man who served the god as his priest Leaving Taygetus from here you come to the site of the city Bivseae. There still remains here a temple of Dionysus with an image in the open But the image in the temple women only may see, for women by themselves perform in secret the sacrificial rites Above Bryseae rises Taletum, a peak of Taygetus They call it sacred to Helius (the Sun), and among the sacrifices they offer here to Helius are hoises I am aware that the Persians also are wont to offer the same sacrifice Not far from Taletum is a place called Euoras, the haunt of wild animals, especially wild goats In fact all Taygetus is a hunting-ground for these goats and for boars, and it is well stocked with both deer and bears Taletum and Euoras is a place they name Therae, where they say Leto from the Peaks of Taygetus is a sanctuary of Demeter surnamed Eleusiman Here according to the Lacedaemonian story Heracles was hidden by Asclepius while he was being healed of a wound. In the sanctuary is a wooden image of Orpheus, a work, they say, of Pelasgians. I know also of the following lite which is performed here By the sea was a city Helos, which Homer too has mentioned in his list of the Lacedaemonians.

"These had their home in Amyclae, and in Helos the town by the seaside."

It was founded by Helius, the youngest of the sons of Perseus, and the Donans afterwards reduced it by siege. Its inhabitants became the first slaves of the Lacedaemonian state, and were the first to be called Helots, as in fact Helots they were The slaves afterwards acquired, although they were Domans of Messenia, also came to be called Helots, just as the whole Greek race were called Hellenes from the region in Thessaly once called Hellas From this Helos, on stated days, they bring up to the sanctuary of the Eleusinian a wooden image of the Maid, daughter of Demeter Fifteen stades distant from the sanctuary is Lapithaeum, named after Lapithus, a native of the district So this Lapithaeum is on Taygetus, and not far off is Deleium, where is in the open an image of Artemis Deleatis, and beside it is a spring which they name Anonus About twenty stades past Dereum is Haipleia, which extends as far as the plain

They say that Tyndaieus dwelt here when he fled from Sparta before Hippocoon and his sons Remarkable sights I remember seeing here were a sanctuary of Asclepius and the spring Pellanis Into it they say a maiden fell when she was drawing water, and when she had disappeared the veil on her head reappeared in another spring, Lancia A hundred stades away from Pellana is the place called Belemina It is naturally the best watered region of Laconia, seeing that the liver Eurotas passes through it, while it has abundant springs of its own haid to work, but when worked sanctuaries of the gods might be adorned with them, while they are especially adapted for beautifying swimming-baths and fountains. Here before the village stands an image of Zeus of Croceae in marble, and the Dioscuri in bronze are at the quarry. After Croceae, turning away to the right from the straight road to Gythium, you will reach a city Aegiae. They say that this is the city which Homer 1 in his poem calls Augeae. Here is a lake called Poseidon's, and by the lake is a temple with an image of the god. They are afraid to take out the fish, saying that a fisherman in these waters turns into the fish called the fisher.

Gythium is thirty stades distant from Aegiae, built by the sea in the territory of the Free Laconians, whom the emperor Augustus freed from the bondage in which they had been to the Lacedaemonians in Sparta All the Peloponnesus, except the Isthmus of Corinth, is surrounded by sea, but the best shell-fish for the manufacture of purple dve after those of the Phoenician sea are to be found on the coast of Laconia The Free Laconians have eighteen cities, the first as you go down from Aegiae to the sea is Gythium, after it come Teuthrone and Las and Pyirhichus, on Taenaium are Caenepolis, Oetylus, Leuctra and Thalamae, and in addition Alagonia and Gerenia. On the other side of Gythium by the sea are Asopus, Aciae, Boeae, Zarax, Epidaurus Limera, Brasiae, Geronthiae and Marius These are all that are left to the Free Laconians out of twenty-four cities which once were All the other cities with which my narrative will deal belong, it must be remembered, to Sparta, and are not independent like those I have already The people of Gythium say that their city had no human founder, but that Heracles and Apollo, when they were reconciled after their strife for the possession of the tripod, united to found the In the market-place they have images of Apollo and of Heracles, and a Dionysus stands near In another part of the city are Carnean Apollo, a sanctuary of Ammon and a bronze image of Asclepius, whose temple is roofless, a spring belonging to the god, a holy sanctuary of Demeter and an image of Poseidon Earth-embracei Him whom the people of Gythium name Old Man, saying that he lives in the sea, I found to be Nereus. They got this name originally from Homer, who says in a part of the Iliad 1 where Thetis is speaking .-

"Into the broad expanse, and into the bosom of ocean

Plunge, to behold the old man of the sea and the home of your father"

Here is also a gate called the Gate of Castor, and on the citadel have been built a temple and image of Athena

XXII. Just about three stades from Gythium is an unwrought stone. Legend has it that when Orestes sat down upon it his madness left him. For this reason the stone was named in the Doman tongue Zeus Cappotas Before Gythium lies the island Cranae, and Homer² says that when Alexander had carried off Helen he had intercourse with her there for the first time. On the mainland opposite the island is a sanctuary of Aphrodite Migoritis (Union), and the whole place is called Migorium. This sanctuary, they say, was made by Alexander But when Menelaus had taken Ilium and had returned safe home eight years after the sack of Troy, he set up near the sanctuary of Migoritis an image of Thetis and the goddesses Praxidicae (Exacters of Justice). Above Migorium is a mountain called Larysium sacred to Dionysus, and at the beginning of spring they hold a festival in honour of Dionysus, and among the things they say about the ritual is that they find here a ripe

bunch of grapes

Some thuty stades beyond Gythium on the left there are on the mainland walls of a place called Timasus (Three Islands), which was in my opinion a fort and not a city Its name I think is derived from the islets which he off the coast here, three in number. About eighty stades beyond Timasus I came to the ruins of Helos, and some thirty stades faither is Acriae, a city on the coast Well worth seeing here are a temple and marble image of the Mother of the Gods The people of Acriae say that this is the oldest sanctuary of this goddess in the Peloponnesus, although the Magnesians, who live to the north of Mount Sipylus, have on the lock Coddinus the most ancient of all the images of the Mother of the gods The Magnesians say that it was made by Bioteas the son of Tantalus people of Acriae once produced an Olympian victor, Nicocles, who at two Olympian festivals carried

There has been raised to him a monument between the gymnasium and the wall by the harbour A hundred and twenty stades inland from Acriae is Geronthiae It was inhabited before the Heracleidae came to Peloponnesus, but the Domans of Lacedaemon expelled the Achaean inhabitants and afterwards sent to it settlers of then own, but in my time it belonged to the Free Laconians On the road from Acriae to Geronthiae is a village called Palaea (Old), and in Geronthiae itself are a temple and grove of Ares Every year they hold a festival in honour of the God, at which women are forbidden to enter the grove Around the market-place are their springs of dunking-water. On the citadel is a temple of Apollo with the head of an ivory image The rest of the image was destroyed by fire along with the former temple

Mailus is another town of the Free Laconians, distant from Geronthiae one hundred stades. Here is an ancient sanctuary common to all the gods, and around it is a grove containing springs. In a sanctuary of Artemis also there are springs. In fact Mailus has an unsurpassed supply of water. Above the town, and like it in the interior, is a village, Glyppia. From Geronthrae to another village, Selinus, is a journey of twenty stades.

These places are inland from Acriae By the sea is a city Asopus, sixty stades distant from Acriae.

them where they were to dwell. When therefore they had gone on shore, and a hare appeared to them, they looked upon the hare as then guide on the way. When it dived into a myitle tree, they built a city on the site of the myitle, and down to this day they worship that myitle tree, and name Aitemis Saviour. In the market place of Boeae is a temple of Apollo, and in another part of the town are temples of Asclepius, of Serapis, and of Isis. The ruins of Etis are not more than seven stades distant from Boeae. On the way to them there stands on the left a stone image of Hermes. Among the ruins is a not insignificant sanctuary of Asclepius and Health.

XXIII Cythera lies opposite Boeae, to the promontory of Platanistus, the point where the island lies nearest to the mainland, it is a voyage of forty stades from a promontory on the mainland called Onugnathus. In Cythera is a port Scandera on the coast, but the town Cythera is about ten stades inland from Scandera. The sanctuary of Aphrodite Urania (the Heavenly) is most holy, and it is the most ancient of all the sanctuaries of Aphrodite among the Greeks. The goddess herself is represented by an armed image of wood

On the voyage from Boeae towards the point of Malea is a halbour called Nymphaeum, with a statue of Poseidon standing, and a cave close to the sea, in it is a spring of sweet water. There is a large population in the district. After doubling the point of Malea and proceeding a hundred stades, you leach a place on the coast within the frontier of the Boeatae, which is sacred to Apollo and called Epi-

For the wooden image which is now here. once stood in Delos Delos was then a Greek market, and seemed to offer security to traders on account of the god, but as the place was unfortified and the inhabitants unarmed, Menophanes, an officer of Mithidates, attacked it with a fleet, to show his contempt for the god, or acting on the orders of Mithridates, for to a man whose object is gain what is sacied is of less account than what is profitable This Menophanes put to death the foreigners residing there and the Delians themselves, and after plundering much property belonging to the traders and all the offerings, and also carrying women and children away as slaves, he razed Delos itself to the ground As it was being sacked and pillaged, one of the barbarians wantonly flung this image into the sea, but the wave took it and brought it to land here in the country of the Boeatae For this leason they call the place Epidelium But neither Menophanes noi Mithidates himself escaped the wrath of the god. Menophanes, as he was putting to sea after the sack of Delos was sunk at once by those of the merchants who had escaped, for they lay in wait for him in ships The god caused Mithridates at a later date to lay hands upon himself, when his empire had been destroyed and he himself was being hunted on all sides by the Romans There are some who say that he obtained a violent death as a favour at the hands of one of his meicenaries This was the reward of their implety Limeia, distant some two hundred stades from Epidelium. The people say that they are not descended from the Lacedaemonians but from the Epidaurians of the Argolid, and that they touched at this point in Laconia when sailing on public business to Asclepius in Cos. Warned by dreams that appeared to them, they remained and settled here. They also say that a snake, which they were bringing from their home in Epidaurus, escaped from the ship, and disappeared into the ground not far from the sea. As a result of the portent of the snake together with the vision in their dreams they resolved to remain and settle here. There are alters to Asclepius where the snake disappeared, with olive trees growing round them.

About two stades to the right is the water of Ino, as it is called, in extent like a small lake, but going deeper into the earth. Into this water they throw cakes of barley meal at the festival of Ino. If good luck is portended to the thiower, the water keeps them under. But if it brings them to the surface, it is judged a bad sign. The craters in Aetina have the same feature, for they lower into them objects of gold and silver and also all kinds of victims. If the fire receives and consumes them, they rejoice at the appearance of a good sign, but if it casts up what has been thrown in, they think misfortune will befall the man to whom this happens.

By the road leading from Boeae to Epidaurus Limera is a sanctuary of Artemis Limnatis (Of the Lake) in the country of the Epidaurians. The city lies on high ground, not far from the sea. Here the sanctuary of Aitemis is worth seeing, also that of Asclepius with a standing statue of stone, a temple of Athena on the acropolis, and of Zeus with the title Savious in front of the harbour. A promontory called Minoa projects into the sea near 1 the town. The bay has nothing to distinguish it from all the other inlets of the sea in Laconia, but the beach here contains pebbles of prettier form and of all colours.

XXIV. A hundred stades from Epidaurus is Zarax; though possessing a good harbour, it is the most runnous of the towns of the Free Laconians, since it was the only town of theirs to be depopulated by Cleonymus the son of Cleomenes, son of Agesipolis I have told the story of Cleomenes elsewhere? There is nothing in Zarax except a temple of Apollo, with a statue holding a lyie, at the head of the harbour?

The road from Zaiax follows the coast for about a hundred stades, and there strikes inland. After an ascent of ten stades inland are the ruins of the so-called Cyphanta, among which is a cave sacred to Asclepius, the image is of stone. There is a fountain of cold water springing from the rock, where they say that Atalanta, distressed by this t when hunting, struck the rock with her spear, so that the water gushed forth.

Biasiae is the last town on the coast belonging to the Free Laconians in this direction. It is distant two hundred stades by sea from Cyphanta. The inhabitants have a story, found nowhere else in Greece. that Semele, after giving birth to her son by Zeus, was discovered by Cadmus and put with Dionysus into a chest, which was washed up by the waves in their country. Semele, who was no longer alive when found, received a splendid funeral, but they brought up Dionysus. For this reason the name of their city, hitherto called Oreiatae, was changed to Brasiae after the washing up of the chest to land; so too in our time the common word used of the waves casting things ashore is ekbrazem. The people of Brasiae add that Ino in the course of her wanderings came to the country, and agreed to become the nurse of Dionysus They show the cave where Ino nuised him, and call the plain the garden of Dionysus The temples here are those of Asclepius and of Achilles, in whose honour they hold an annual festival. There is a small promontory at Brasiae, which projects gently into the sea, on it stand bronze figures, not more than a foot high, with caps on their heads. I am not suie whether they consider them to be Dioscuri or Corybants. They are three in number, a statue of Athena makes a fourth

To the right of Gythium is Las, ten stades from the sea and forty from Gythium. The site of the present town extends over the ground between the Taygetus, and it passes within five stades of the town. At a spot called Aramus is the tomb of Las with a statue upon it The natives say that Las was then founder and was killed by Achilles, and that Achilles put in to their country to ask the hand of Helen of Tyndareus In point of fact it was Patroclus who killed Las, for it was he who was Helen's suitor We need not regard it as a proof that Achilles did not ask for Helen because he is not mentioned in the Catalogue of Women as one of her surtors But at the beginning of his poem Homer says that Achilles came to Trov as a favour to the sons of Atreus, and not because he was bound by the oaths which Tvndareus exacted; and in the Games he makes Antilochus say that Odysseus was a generation older than he,2 whereas Odysseus, telling Alcinous of his descent to Hades and other adventures, said that he wished to see Theseus and Penithous, men of an earlier age.3 We know that Theseus carried off Helen, so that it is quite impossible that Achilles could have been her suitor

XXV Beyond the tomb a rivel named Scyras enters the sea. Formerly it was without a name, but was so called, because Pyrihus the son of Achilles put in here when he sailed from Scyros to wed Heimione. Across the rivel is an ancient shrine. . . further from an altar of Zeus. Inland, for ty stades from the river, hes Pyrihichus, the name of which is said to be derived from Pyrihus the son of Achilles; but according to another account Pyrihichus was one of the gods called Curetes Others say that Silenus came from Malea and settled here. That Silenus was brought up in Malea is clear from these words in an ode of Pindar 1

The mighty one, the dancer, whom the mount of Malea nurtured, husband of Nais, Silenus

Not that Pindar said his name was Pyrrhichus, that is a statement of the men of Malea. At Pyrrhichus there is a well in the market-place, considered to be the gift of Silenus. If this were to fail, they would be short of water. The sanctuaries of the gods, that they have in the country, are of Artemis, called Astrateia, because the Amazons stayed their advance (sirateia) here, and an Apollo Amazonius Both gods are represented by wooden images, said to have been dedicated by the women from Thermodon.

From Pyrrhichus the road comes down to the sea at Teuthrone The inhabitants declaie that their founder was Teuthias, an Athenian They honour Artemis Issonia most of the Gods, and have a spring Naia The promontory of Taenarum projects into the sea 150 stades from Teuthione, with the harbours Achilleius and Psamathus On the promontory is a temple like a cave, with a statue of Poseidon in front of it Some of the Greek poets state that Heracles brought up the hound of Hades here, though there is no road that leads underground through the cave, and it is not easy to believe that the gods possess any underground dwelling where the souls collect But Hecataeus of Miletus gave a plausible explanation, stating that a terrible seipent lived on Taenaium, and was called the hound of Hades, because any one bitten was bound to die of the poison at once, and it was this snake. he said that was brought by Heracles to Eurystheus But Homer, who was the first to call the creature brought by Heracles the hound of Hades. 1 did not give it a name or describe it as of manifold form. as he did in the case of the Chimaera 2 Later poets gave the name Cerbeius, and though in other respects they made him resemble a dog, they say that he had three heads. Homer, however, does not imply that he was a dog, the friend of man, any more than if he had called a real serpent the hound Among other offerings on Taenarum is a bionze statue of Arion the harper on a dolphin Herodotus has told the story of Arion and the dolphin, as he heard it, in his history of Lydia 3 have seen the dolphin at Poioselene that newards the boy for saving his life. It had been damaged by fishermen and he cured it I saw this dolphin obeying his call and carrying him whenever he wanted to lide on it. There is a spring also on Taenaium, but now it possesses nothing marvellous Formerly, as they say, it showed harbours and ships to those who looked into the water. These sights in the water were brought to an end for good and all by a woman washing duty clothes in it.

From the point of Taenarum Caenepolis is distant forty stades by sea. Its name also was formerly Taenarum. In it is a hall of Demeter, and a temple of Aphrodite on the shore, with a standing statue of stone. Thirty stades distant is Thyrides, a headland of Taenaium, with the ruins of a city Hippola, among them is a sanctuary of Athena Hippolaitis. A little further are the town and harbour of Messa. From this harbour it is 150 stades to Oetylus. The hero, from whom the city received its name, was an Argive by descent, son of Amphianax, the son of Antimachus. In Oetylus the sanctuary of Sarapis, and in the market-place a wooden image of Apollo Carneius are worth seeing.

XXVI From Oetylus to Thalamae the road is about eighty stades long. On it is a sanctuary of Ino and an oracle They consult the oracle in sleep, and the goddess reveals whatever they wish to learn, in dreams. Bronze statues of Pasiphae and of Helius stand in the unroofed part of the sanctuary It was not possible to see the one within the temple clearly, owing to the gailands, but they say this too is of bronze Water, sweet to drink, flows from a sacred spring Pasiphae is a title of the Moon, and is not a local goddess of the people of Thalamae

Twenty stades from Thalamae is a place called Pephnus on the coast. In front of it lies a small island no larger than a big rock, also called Pephnus. The people of Thalamae say that the Dioscuri were born here. I know that Aleman too says this in a song but they do not say that they remained to be brought up in Pephnus, but that it was Hermes who took them to Pellana. In this little island there are bronze statues of the Dioscuri, a foot high, in the open air. The sea will not move them, though in winter-time it washes over the rock, which is wonderful. Also the ants here have a whiter colour than is usual. The Messenians say that this district was originally theirs, and so they think that the Dioscuri belong to them rather than to the Lacedaemonians.

Twenty stades from Pephnus is Leuctra know why the city has this name If indeed it is derived from Leucippus the son of Perieres, as the Messenians say, it is for this reason, I think, that the inhabitants honour Asclepius most of the gods, supposing him to be the son of Arsinoe the daughter of Leucippus There is a stone statue of Asclepius, and of Ino in another place Also a temple and statue have been erected to Cassandra the daughter of Priam, called Alexandra by the natives are wooden images of Apollo Carneius according to the same custom that prevails among the Lacedaemonians of Sparta. On the acropolis is a sanctuary and image of Athena, and there is a temple and grove of Eros in Leuctia Water flows through the grove in winter-time, but the leaves which are shaken from the trees by the wind would not be carried away by the water even in flood. I record an event which I know to have taken place in my time on the coast of Leuctra A fire carried by the wind into a wood destroyed most of the trees, and when the place showed bare, a statue of Zeus of Ithome was found to have been dedicated there The Messenians say that this is evidence that Leuctia was formerly a part of Messenia. But it is possible, if the Lacedaemonians originally lived in Leuctra, that Zeus of Ithome might be worshipped among them

Cardamyle, which is mentioned by Homer in the Gifts promsed by Agamemnon, 1 is subject to the Lacedaemonians of Sparta, having been separated from Messenia by the emperor Augustus. It is eight stades from the sea and sixty from Leuctia Here not fai from the beach is a precinct sacred to the daughters of Nereus. They say that they came up from the sea to this spot to see Pyrrhus the son of Achilles, when he was going to Sparta to wed Hermione. In the town is a sanctuary of Athena, and an Apollo Carneius according to the local Dorian custom

A city, called in Homei's poems Enope, with Messenian inhabitants but belonging to the league of the Free Laconians, is called in our time Gerenia. One account states that Nestoi was brought up in this city, another that he took refuge here, when Pylos was captured by Heracles Here in Gerenia is a tomb of Machaon, son of Asclepius, and a holy sanctuary. In his temple men may find cures for diseases. They call the holy spot Rhodos, there is a standing bronze statue of Machaon, with a crown on his head which the Messenians in the local speech call hiphos. The author of the epic The Little Ihad says that Machaon was killed by Eurypylus, son of Telephus. I myself know that to be the reason of the practice at the temple of Asclepius at Pergamum, where they begin their hymns with Telephus but make no reference to Eurypylus, or care to mention his name in the temple at all, as they know that he was the slaver of Machaon. It is said that the bones of Machaon were brought home by Nestor, but that Podaleirius, as they were returning after the sack of Troy, was carried out of his course and reached Syrnus on the Carian mainland in safety and settled there

In the territory of Gerenia is a mountain, Calathium; on it is a sanctuary of Claea with a cave close beside it; it has a narrow entrance, but contains objects which are worth seeing stades inland from Gerenia is Alagonia, a town which I have already mentioned in the list of the Free Laconians Worth seeing here are temples of

Dionysus and of Artemis

MESSENIA

I. The frontier between Messenia and that part of it which was incorporated by the emperor in Laconia towards Geienia is formed in our time by the valley called Choerius They say that this country, being unoccupied, received its first habitants in the following manner. On the death of Leley, who suled in the present Laconia, then called after him Lelegia, Myles, the elder of his sons, received the kingdom Polycaon was younger and for this leason a private person, until he took to wife Messene, the daughter of Thopas, son of Phorbas, from Aigos Messene, being proud of her origin, for her father was the chief of the Greeks of his day in reputation and power, was not content that her husband should be a private They collected a force from Argos and from Lacedaemon and came to this country, the whole land receiving the name Messene from the wife of Polycaon Together with other cities, they founded Andama, where their palace was built Before the battle which the Thebans fought with the Lacedaemonians at Leuctra, and the foundation of the present city of Messene under Ithome, I think that no city had the name Messene base this conclusion principally on Homer's lines.1

MESSENIA, I. 3-6

In the catalogue of those who came to Troy he enumerated Pylos, Arene and other towns, but called no town Messene In the Odyssey he shows that the Messemans were a tribe and not a city by the following —

"For Messenian men cairied away sheep from Ithaca''1

He is still more clear when speaking about the bow of Iphitus:—

"They met one another in Messene in the dwelling of Oitilochus." 2

By the dwelling of Ortilochus he meant the city of Pherae in Messene, and explained this himself in the visit of Peisistratus to Menelaus:—

"They came to Pherae to the house of Diocleus, son of Ortilochus." 3

The first rulers then in this country were Polycaon, the son of Lelex, and Messene his wife. It was to her that Caucon, the son of Celaenus, son of Phlyus, brought the rites of the Great Goddesses from Eleusis. Phlyus himself is said by the Athenians to have been the son of Earth, and the hymn of Musaeus to Demeter made for the Lycomidae agrees. But the mysteries of the Great Goddesses were raised to greater honour many years later than Caucon by Lycus, the son of Pandion, an oak-wood, where he purified the celebrants, being still called Lycus' wood. That there is a wood in this land so called is stated by Rhianus the Cretan 4—

"By rugged Elaeum above Lycus' wood"

MESSENIA, 1 7-11 1

That this Lycus was the son of Pandion is made clear by the lines on the statue of Methapus, who made certain improvements in the mysteries. Methapus was an Athenian by birth, an expert in the mysteries and founder of all kinds of rites. It was he who established the mysteries of the Cabiri at Thebes, and dedicated in the hut of the Lycomidae a statue with an inscription that amongst other things helps to confirm my account —

"I sanctified houses of Hermes and paths of holy Demeter and Kore her firstborn, where they say that Messene established the feast of the Great Goddesses, taught by Caucon, sprung from Phlyus' noble son And I wondered that Lycus, son of Pandron, brought all the Attreprite to wise Andama"

This inscription shows that Caucon who came to Messene was a descendant of Phlyus, and proves my other statements with regard to Lycus, and that the mysteries were originally at Andania. And it seems natural to me that Messene should have established the mysteries where she and Polycaon lived, not anywhere else.

II As I was extremely anxious to learn what children were born to Polycaon by Messene, I read the poem called Eoeae and the epic Naupacha, and in addition to these all the genealogies of Cinaethon and Asius However, they made no reference to this matter, although I know that the Great Eoeae says that Polycaon, the son of Butes, married Euaichme, the daughter of Hyllus, son of Heracles, but it omits all reference to the husband of Messene and to Messene herself. Some time later, as no descendant of Polycaon survived (in my opinion his house lasted for five generations, but no more), they summoned Perieres, the son of Aeolus, as king. To him, the Messenians say, came Melaneus, a good archer and considered for this reason to be a son of Apollo, Peneres assigned to him as a dwelling a part of the country now called the Carnasium, but which then received the name Oechalia, derived, as they say, from the wife of Melaneus Most matters of Greek history have come to be disputed. Thessalians say that Eurytium, which to day is not inhabited, was formerly a city and was called The account given by the Euboeans agrees with the statements of Creophylus in his Heracleia, and Hecataeus of Miletus stated that Oechalia is in Scius, a part of the territory of Eretiia Nevertheless, I think that the whole version of the Messenians is more probable than these, particularly on account of the bones of Eurytus, which my story will deal with later 1

Peneres had issue by Goigophone the daughter of Perseus, Aphareus and Leucippus, and after his death they inherited the Messenian kingdom. But Aphareus had the greater authority. On his accession he founded-a city Alene, named after the daughter of Oebalus, who was both his wife and sister by the same mother. For Gorgophone was married to Oebalus. The facts regarding her have already been given twice, in my account of the Argolid and of Laconia 1 Aphareus then founded the city of Arene in Messenia, and received into his house his cousin Neleus the son of Cietheus, son of Aeolus (he was also called a son of Poseidon), when he was driven from Iolcos by Pelias He gave him the maritime part of the land, where with other towns was Pylos, in which Neleus settled and established his palace Lycus the son of Pandion also came to Arene, when he too was driven from Athens by his brother Aegeus, and revealed the rites of the Great Goddesses to Aphareus and his children and to his wife Arene, but it was to Andania that he brought the lites and revealed them there, as it was there that Caucon initiated Messene Of the children born to Aphareus Idas was the elder and more brave. Lynceus the younger; he, if Pindar's words are ciedible,2 possessed eyesight so keen that he saw through the trunk of an oak. We know of no child of Lynceus, but Idas had by Marpessa a daughter Cleopatia, who married Meleager The writer of the epic Cypria says that the wife of Protesilaus, the first who dared to land when the Greeks reached Tiov, was named Polydora, whom he calls a daughter of Meleager the son of Oeneus If this is correct, these three women, the first of whom was Marpessa, all slew themselves on the death of their husbands, when Lynceus was killed by Polydeuces and Idas met his doom from the lightning, the house of Aphareus was bereft of all male descendants, and the kingdom of Messenia passed to Nestor the son of Neleus, including all the part ruled formerly by Idas, but not that subject to the sons of Asclepius. For they say that the sons of Asclepius who went to Troy were Messenians, Asclepius being the son of Arsinoe, daughter of Leucippus, not the son of Coronis, and they call a desolate spot in Messenia by the name Tricca and quote the lines of Homer,1 in which Nestor tends Machaon kindly, when he has been wounded by the arrow He would not have shown such readiness except to a neighbour and king of a kindred people. But the surest warrant for their account of the Asclepiadae is that they point to a tomb of Machaon in Gerenia and to the sanctuary of his sons at Pharae

After the conclusion of the Trojan war and the death of Nestor after his return home, the Doman expedition and retuin of the Heiacleidae, which took place two generations later, drove the descendants of Nestor from Messenia. This has already formed a part of my account of Tisamenus ² I will only add the following When the Domans assigned Argos to Temenus, Cresphontes asked them for the land of Messenia, in that he was older than Alistodemus Alistodemus was now dead, but Cresphontes was vigorously opposed by Theras the son of Autesion, who was of Theban origin and fourth in descent from Polyneices the son of Oedipus. He was at that time guardian of the sons of Austodemus, being their uncle on the mother's side, Aristodemus having mairied a daughter of Autesion, called Argeia Cresphontes, wishing to obtain Messenia as his portion at all costs, approached Temenus. and having suborned him pretended to leave the decision to the lot Temenus put the lots of the children of Aristodemus and of Cresphontes into a jar containing water, the terms being that the party whose lot came up first should be the first to choose a portion of the country Temenus had caused both lots to be made of clay, but for the sons of Aristodemus sun-dried, for Cresphontes baked with fire So the lot of the sons of Austodemus was dissolved, and Cresphontes, winning in this way, chose Messenia The common people of the old Messenians were not dispossessed by the Dorians, but agreed to be ruled by Cresphontes and to divide the land with the Dorians They were induced to give way to them in this by the suspicion which they felt for their rulers, as the Neleidae were originally of Iolcos Cresphontes took to wife Merope the daughter of Cypselus, then king of the Arcadians, by whom with other children was born to him Aepytus his youngest. He had the palace, which he and his children were to occupy, built in Stenyclerus Originally Peneres and the other kings dwelt at Andania, but when Aphareus founded Arene, he and his sons settled there. In the time of Nestor and his descendants the palace was at Pylos, but Cresphontes ordained that the king should live in Stenyclerus. As his government for the most part was directed in favour of the people, the rich rebelled and killed Cresphontes and all his sons except Aepytus. He was still a boy and being brought up by Cypselus, and was the sole survivor of his house. When he reached manhood. he was brought back by the Arcadians to Messene, the other Dorian kings, the sons of Aristodemus and Isthmius, the son of Temenus, helping to restore him. On becoming king, Aepytus punished his father's murderers and all who had been accessories to the crime By winning the Messenian nobles to his side by deference, and all who were of the people by gifts, he attained to such honour that his descendants were given the name of Aepvtidae instead of Heracleidae.

Glaucus, his son and successor, was content to imitate his father in all other matters, both publicly and in his treatment of individuals, but attained to greater piety. For the precinct of Zeus on the summit of Ithome, having been consecrated by Polycaon and Messene, had hitherto received no honour among the Dorians, and it was Glaucus who established this worship among them; and he was the first to sacrifice to Machaon the son of Asclepius in Gerenia, and to assign to Messene, the daughter of Triopas, the honours customarily paid to heroes. Isthmus the son of Glaucus built a shrine also to Gorgasus and Nicomachus which is in Phaiae Isthmius had a son Dotadas, who constructed the harbour at Mothone, though Messenia contained others. Sybotas the son of Dotadas established the annual sacrifice by the king to the river Pamisus and also the offering to the hero Eurytus the son of Melaneus at Oechalia before the mysteries of the great Goddesses, which were still held at Andana.

IV. In the reign of Phintas the son of Sybotas the Messemans for the first time sent an offering and chorus of men to Apollo at Delos Their processional hymn to the god was composed by Eumelus. this poem being the only one of his that is considered genuine It was in the reign of Phintas that a quairel first took place with the Lacedaemonians The very cause is disputed, but is said to have been as follows There is a sanctuary of Aitemis called Limnatis (of the Lake) on the frontier of Messenii, in which the Messenians and the Lacedaemonians alone of the Domans shared According to the Lacedaemonians their maidens coming to the festival were violated by Messeman men and then king was killed in trying to prevent it He was Teleclus the son of Archelaus, son of Agesilaus, son of Doryssus, son of Labotas, son of Echestratus, son of Agis In addition to this they say that the maidens who were violated killed themselves for shame Messenians say that a plot was formed by Teleclus against persons of the highest rank in Messene who had come to the sanctuary, his incentive being the excellence of the Messenian land, in furtherance of his design he selected some Spaitan youths, all without beaids, diessed them in gills' clothes and ornaments, and providing them with daggers introduced them among the Messenians when they were resting, the Messenians, in defending themselves, killed the beardless youths and Teleclus himself, but the Lacedaemonians, they say, whose king did not plan this without the general consent, being conscious that they had begun the wrong, did not demand justice for the murder of Teleclus These are the accounts given by the two sides; one may believe them according to one's feelings towards either side

A generation later in the reign of Alcamenes the son of Teleclus in Lacedaemon-the king of the other house was Theopompus the son of Nicander, son of Charillus, son of Polydectes, son of Eunomus, son of Prytanis, son of Eurypon, in Messenia Antiochus and Androcles, the sons of Phintas were reigning—the mutual hatred of the Lacedaemonians and Messenians was aroused, and the Lacedaemonians began war, obtaining a pretext which was not only sufficient for them, eager for a quarrel as they were and resolved on war at all costs, but also plausible in the highest degree although with a more peaceful disposition it could have been settled by the decision of a court. What happened was as follows There was a Messenian Polychaies, a man of no small distinction in all respects and an Olympic victor (The Eleians were holding the fourth Olympiad,1 the only event being the short foot-race, when Polychaies won his victory) This man, possessing cattle without land of his own to provide them with sufficient grazing, gave them to a Spartan Euaephnus

Euaephnus to have a share of the produce Now Euaephnus was a man who set unjust gain above lovalty, and a trickster besides He sold the cattle of Polychares to some merchants who put in to Laconia and went himself to inform Polychares, but he said that pinates had landed in the country, had overcome him and carried off the cattle and the heidsmen. While he was trying to deceive him by his lies, one of the herdsmen, escaping in the meantime from the merchants. returned and found Euaephnus there with his master, and convicted him before Polychares. Thus caught and unable to deny it, he made many appeals to Polychares himself and to his son to grant him pardon; for among the many inducements to be found in human nature which drive us to wrongdoing the love of gain exercises the greatest power. He stated the price which he had received for the cattle and begged that the son of Polychares should come with him to receive it When on their way they reached Laconia, Euaephnus dared a deed more improus than the first, he murdered Polychares' son Polychaies, when he heard of this new misfortune, went to Lacedaemon and plagued the kings and ephors, loudly lamenting his son and recounting the wrongs that he had suffered from Euaephnus, whom he had made his friend and trusted above all the Lace-Obtaining no redress in spite of daemonians when the Phocian leaders had seized the temple at Delphi, the kings and every Spartan of repute privately, and the board of ephors and senate publicly, had a share of the god's property most convincing proof that the Lacedaemonians would stick at nothing for the sake of gain, they reproach them with their alliance with Apollodorus, who became triant in Cassandreia I could not introduce into the present account the leasons why the Messemans have come to regard this as so bitter a reproach Although the courage of the Messenians and the length of time for which they fought differ from the facts of the tyranny of Apollodorus, in then disastious character the sufferings of the people of Cassandreia would not fall far short of the Messeman.

These then are the reasons for the war which the two sides allege An embassy then came from the Lacedaemonians to demand the suitender of Polychaies. The Messenian kings replied to the ambassadors that after deliberation with the people they would send the findings to Sparta, and after their departure they themselves summoned the citizens to The views put forward differed widely, a meeting Androcles urging the surrender of Polychares as guilty of an impious and abominable crime chus among other arguments urged against him that it would be the most piteous thing that Polychaies should suffer before the eves of Euaephnus, and enumerated in detail all that he would have to undergo Finally the supporters of Androcles and of Antiochus were so carried away that they took up arms But the battle did not last long, for the party of Antiochus, fai outnumbering the other, killed Androcles and his principal supporters, Antiochus, now sole king, sent to Sparta that he was ready to submit the matter to the courts which I have already mentioned But the Lacedaemonians are said to have made no reply to the bearers of the letter

Not many months later Antiochus died and his son Euphaes succeeded to the kingdom The Lacedaemonians, without sending a herald to declare war on the Messenians or renouncing their friendship beforehand, had made then preparations secretly and with all the concealment possible, they first took an oath that neither the length of the war, should it not be decided soon, nor their disasters, however great they might be, would deter them until they won the land of Messenia by the sword After taking this oath, they attacked Ampheia by night, appointing Alcamenes the son of Teleclus leader of the force. Ampheia is a small town in Messenia near the Laconian border, of no great size, but situated on a high hill and possessing copious springs of water It seemed generally a suitable base for the whole The gates being open and the town not garrisoned, they took it and killed the Messenians captured there, some still in their beds and others who had taken refuge at the sanctuaries and altars of the gods when they realized what had happened. Those who escaped were few This was the first attack which the Lacedaemonians made on the Messenians, in the second year of the ninth Olympiad, when Xenodocus of Messenia won the short footrace. In Athens there were not as yet the archons appointed annually by lot, for at first the people deprived the descendants of Melanthus, called Medontidae, of most of their power, transforming the kingship into a constitutional office, afterwards they limited their tenure of office to ten years. At the time of the seizure of Ampheia, Aesimides the son of Aeschylus was holding his fifth year of office at Athens.

Before I wrote the history of the war and all the sufferings and actions that heaven prepared in it for both sides, I wished to reach a decision regarding the age of a certain Messenian This was was fought between the Lacedaemonians with their allies and the Messenians with their supporters, but received its name not from the invaders like the Persian and Peloponnesian wais, but was called Messenian from their disasters, just as the name Trojan war, rather than Greek, came to be universally applied to the war at Troy An account of this war of the Messenians has been given by Rhianus of Bene in his epic, and by Myron of Priene Myron's history is in prose Neither writer achieved a complete and continuous account of the whole war from its beginning to the end, but only of the part which each selected Myion nariated the capture of Ampheia and subsequent events down to the death of Austodemus, Rhianus did not touch this first war He described the events that in time befell the Messenians after their revolt from the Lacedaemonians, not indeed the whole of them, but those subsequent to the battle which they fought at the Great Trench, as it is called. The Messenian. Aristomenes, on whose account I have made my whole mention of Rhianus and Myron, was the man who first and foremost raised the name of Messene to renown He was introduced by Myron into his history, while to Rhianus in his epic Aristomenes is as great a man as is the Achilles of the Iliad to Homer As their statements differ so widely, it remained for me to adopt one or other of the accounts, but not both together, and Rhianus appeared to me to have given the more probable account as to the age of Austomenes One may realize in others of his works that Myron gives no heed to the question of his statements seeming to lack truth and credibility, and particularly in this Messenian history For he has made Aristomenes kill Theopompus, the king of the Lacedaemonians, shortly before the death of Aristodemus; but we know that Theopompus was not killed either in battle or in any other way before the war was It was this Theopompus who put an end to the war, and my evidence is the lines of Tyrtaeus, which say:-

"To our king beloved of the gods, Theopompus, through whom we took Messene with wide dancing-grounds"

Anstomenes then in my view belongs to the time of the second wai, and I will relate his history when I come to this

The Messenians, when they heard of the events at Ampheia from the actual survivois from the captured town, mustered in Stenyclerus from their cities. When the people had gathered in the assembly, first the leading men and finally the king exhorted them not to be panic-stricken at the sack of Ampheia, or to suppose that the issue of the whole war had already been decided thereby, or to be afind of the power of the Lacedaemonians as superior to their own For the Lacedaemonians had longer practice in warfare, but they themselves had a stronger necessity to show themselves brave men, and greater goodwill would be shown by the gods to men defending their country, who were not the authors of miustice VII With these words Euphaes dismissed the gathering, and henceforward kept all the Messenians under arms, compelling the untrained to learn the art of war and the trained men to undergo a more rigorous discipline than before The Lacedaemonians carried out raids into Messenia, but did no haim to the country, regaiding it as their own, nor did they cut down trees or demolish buildings, but they drove off any cattle that they met with, and carried off the coin and other produce. They made assaults on the towns but captured none, as they were fortified with walls and carefully gar-They withdrew with loss and without risoned

Three years after the capture of Amphera, being eager to put to use the spirit of the Messenians. now at the height of their passion against the Lacedaemonians, and considering too that they had undergone sufficient training, Euphaes ordered an advance He bade the slaves also accompany him. bringing wood and all else that was required for the making of an entrenched camp The Lacedaemonians heard from their garrison at Ampheia that the Messenians were marching out, so they also came out to battle There was a place in Messenia which was in other ways suitable, for an engagement, but had a deep ravine in front of it Here Euphaes diew up the Messenians and appointed Cleonnis general, the cavality and light-armed, together amounting to less than 500, were commanded by Pythaiatus and Antandei As the two foices were about to engage, the ravine which divided them prevented the heavy-aimed from coming to close quarters, though they approached one another eagerly and with a recklessness born of hate cavalry and light-aimed engaged above the ravine, but as they were equally matched in numbers and skill, for this reason the fight was indecisive. While they were involved, Euphaes ordered the slaves to fortify with a palisade first the rear of his force and afterwards both flanks, and when the battle had been broken off at nightfall, they fortified his front also on the ravine. So at daybreak the Lacedaemonians realized the forethought of Euphaes. They had no means of fighting the Messemans unless they came out from the stockade, and despaned of forming a siege, for which they were unprepared in all things alike.

They then returned home, but a year later, when the older men reviled them and taunted them both with cowardice and dislegard of their oath, they made a second expedition openly against the Mes-Both kings were in command, Theopompus the son of Nicander and Polydorus the son of Alcamenes, Alcamenes being no longer alive. He reminded them of their oath against the Messenians, and said how noble was then ambition, to prove themselves to have done a deed more glorious than their fathers. who subdued the neighbouring peoples, and to have won a more fortunate land Euphaes spoke at greater length than the Spartan, but no more than he saw the occasion admitted He declared that the contest would be not only for land and possessions, but he knew well what would overtake them if defeated Their wives and children would be carried off as slaves, and death unaccompanied by outrage would be the mildest fate for their grown men, then sanctuanes would be despoiled and their ancestral homes burnt. His words were not supposition, the fate of the men captured at Ampheia was evidence that all could see Better a noble death than such evils, it was far easier for them, while still undefeated and equally matched in courage, to outdo their adversaries in zeal than to repair their losses when once they had lost heart

VIII Such were the words of Euphaes When the leaders on either side gave the signal, the Messenians charged the Lacedaemonians recklessly like men eager for death in their wrath, each one of them eager to be the first to join battle. The Lacedaemonians also advanced to meet them eagerly, but were careful not to break their ranks. When they were about to come to close quarters, they threatened one another by brandishing their arms and with fierce looks, and fell to recriminations, these calling the Messenians already their slaves, no freer than the Helots, the others answering that they were impious in their undertaking, who for the sake of gain attacked their kinsmen and outraged all the ancestral gods of the Donans, and Heracles above all And now with their taunts they come to deeds, mass thrusting against mass, especially on the Lacedaemonian side, and man attacking man The Lacedaemonians were far superior both in tactics and training, and also in numbers, for they had with them the neighbouring peoples already reduced and serving in their ranks, and the Dryopes of Asine. who a generation earlier had been driven out of their own country by the Argives and had come as suppliants to Lacedaemon, were forced to serve in the army Against the Messenian light-armed they employed Cietan archers as mercenaries The Messenians were inspired alike by desperation and readiness to face death, regarding all their sufferings as necessary rather than terrible to men who honoured their country, and exaggerating their achievements and the consequences to the Lacedaemonians. Some of them leapt forth from the ranks, displaying glorious deeds of valour, in others fatally wounded and scarce breathing the frenzy of despair still reigned They encouraged one another, the living and unwounded urging the stricken before their last moment came to sell their lives as dearly as they could and accept their fate with joy And the wounded, when they felt their strength ebbing and breath failing, urged the unwounded to prove themselves no less valorous than they and not to render their death of no avail to their fatherland The Lacedaemonians refrained from exhorting one another, and were less inclined than the Messenians to engage in striking deeds of valour. As they were versed in warfare from boyhood, they employed a deeper formation and hoped that the Messenians would not endure the contest for so long as they, or sustain the toil of battle or wounds These were the differences in both sets of combatants in action and in feeling. but on both sides alike the conquered made no appeals or promises of ransom, perhaps in their enmity despairing of getting quarter, but mainly because they scorned to disgrace their previous achievements The victorious refiained alike from boasting and from taunts, neither side having vet sure hopes of victory The most remarkable was the death of those who tried to strip any of the For if they exposed any part of their bodies, they were struck with javelins or were struck down while intent on their present occupation, or were killed by those whom they were plundering who still lived The kings fought in a manner that deserves mention Theopompus rushed wildly forward to slay Euphaes himself Euphaes, seeing him advancing, said to Antander that the action of Theopompus was no different from the attempt of

was an ancient practice with them not to carry out a pursuit too quickly, as they were more careful about maintaining their formation than about slaying the flying. In the centre, where Euryleon was commanding the Lacedaemonians, and Cleonnis on the Messenian side, the contest was undecided; the coming of night separated them here also

This battle was fought principally or entirely by the heavy-aimed troops on both sides. The mounted men were few and achieved nothing worth mention; for the Peloponnesians were not good horsemen then. The Messenian light-armed and the Cretans on the Lacedaemonian side did not engage at all, for on both sides according to the ancient practice they were posted in reserve to their own infantry. The following day neither side was minded to begin battle or to be the first to set up a trophy, but as the day advanced they made proposals for taking up the dead; when this was agreed on both sides, they proceeded at once to bury them

IX But after the battle the affans of the Messenians began to get senious. They were exhausted by the expenditure of money devoted to the garnsoning of the towns, and their slaves were deserting to the Lacedaemonians. They were visited also by disease, which caused alarm, as resembling plague, although it did not attack all. In these circumstances they resolved to desert all their numerous towns inland and to settle on Mount Ithome. A small town existed here, which they say Homer mentions in the Catalogue

"Stepped Ithome"1

To this town they withdrew, extending the old cucuit to form a sufficient protection for them all. The place was strong in other respects, for Ithome falls short of none of the mountains within the Isthmus in height and at this point was most difficult to climb They also resolved to send an envoy to Delphi, and despatched Tisis the son of Alcıs, a man of the highest reputation, considered to be fully versed in divination. While he was returning from Delphi men from the Lacedaemonian gariison at Ampheia laid an ambush for him Though trapped, he did not submit to be made a prisoner, but stood his ground to resist in spite of the wounds he received, until a voice was heard from an unseen quarter, "Let the bearer of the oracle go free." Tisis, reaching Ithome with all speed, delivered the oracle to the king, and soon afterwards died of his Euphaes assembled the Messemans and made known the oracle

"Ye shall sacrifice a pure maiden to the gods below, appointed by lot of the blood of the sons of Aepytus, and slay her by night But if that ye cannot do, offer a maiden from another house, if the father gives her freely for the slaughter"

When the god declared this, all the maidens of the house of the Aepytidae forthwith cast lots, and the lot fell on the daughter of Luciscus But Epebolus the seer forbade them to offer her, for she was not the daughter of Lyciscus, but the woman who was married to Lyciscus being unable to bear a child had palmed off the girl as hers. While Epebolus was making this declaration, Lyciscus took the girl away and deserted to Sparta The Messenians were in despair when they saw that Lyciscus had fled; thereupon Aristodemus, a son of the house of the Aepytidae, of higher standing than Lyciscus both in reputation and in war, freely offered his daughter for the sacrifice But human affurs and human purpose above all are obscured by fate, just as the mud of a river hides a pebble, for when Aristodemus was striving his utmost to save Messene, fate set this obstacle in his path A Messenian, whose name is not recorded, was in love with the daughter of Aristodemus, and was already about to make her his wife He at first disputed the rights of Austodemus over the gul, for Austodemus, since he had betrothed her to himself, had no further nights over the girl, but he to whom she was betrothed had greater rights than the father Next, when he saw that this was of no avail, he had recourse to a shameless plea, that the girl was with child by him At last he diove Aristodemus to such a fury of passion that he killed his daughter, then cutting her open he showed that she was not pregnant Epebolus, who was present, ordered another man to come forward and offer his daughter, for the daughter of Aristodemus was of no avail to them dead, for the father had murdered her, not offered her to the gods whom the Pythia ordained When the seer said this, the multitude of the Messenians rushed on the gul's lover to kill him, since he had fixed the guilt of bloodshed on Austodemus to no purpose, and had made their hopes of safety doubtful. But as he was a close friend of Euphaes, Euphaes persuaded the Messenians that the oracle was fulfilled by the death of the girl and that the deed done by Aristodemus sufficed for them. When he said this, all the members of the house of the Aepvtidae said that he spoke truth, for each was eager to be rid of the terior threatening his daughter. The people took the advice of the king and broke up the assembly and thereupon turned to sacrifices to the gods and feasting. X But the Lacedaemonians, when they heard the oracle given to the Messenians, were in despair, both they and their kings, and for the future shrank from offering battle

But five years after the escape of Lyciscus from Ithome, the victims being auspicious, the Lacedaemonians marched against Ithome. The Cretans were no longer with them. The allies of the Messenians also were late, for the Spartans had now incurred the suspicion of others of the Peloponnesians, especially of the Arcadians and Argives. The Argives intended to come without the knowledge of the Lacedaemonians, and by private enterprise rather than by public declaration. The expedition was openly proclaimed among the Arcadians, but they did not arrive either. For the Messenians were induced by the credit placed in the oracle to face the risk without allies engagement did not differ in most points from the first, as on this occasion too daylight failed the combatants, but they record that on neither side was a wing or division bloken, as they did not maintain the formation in which they were originally posted, champions on either side meeting in the middle and there supporting the whole combat. Euphaes, who showed more eagerness than a king should and recklessly attacked Theopompus' bodyguard, received a number of mortal wounds When he swooned and fell, the Lacedaemonians did their utmost to drag him into their own ranks as he still breathed But the Messenians were roused by the affection which they felt for their king and by the reproach that would be thens It seemed better to die for their king and sacrifice their lives than that he should be abandoned while one of them So the fall of Euphaes prolonged the battle and called forth further deeds of daring on both sides He came to himself later and saw that his men had not had the worst of the fight, but he died in a few days, having reigned thirteen years over the Messenians, and having been at war with the Lacedaemonians for the whole of his reign.

Euphaes, having no children, left his kingdom to the man chosen by the people Cleonius and Damis came forward to dispute it with Aristodemus, as they were considered superior to him in wai and Antander had been killed by the enemy, risking his life for Euphaes in the battle. The views of both the seers, Epebolus and Ophioneus, were identical, that they should not give the honours of Aepytus and his descendants to a man who was accursed and polluted by the murder of his daughter Nevertheless Aristodemus was chosen and became This Ophioneus, the Messenian seer, was blind from birth and practised the following method of divination By learning the facts relevant to each case, both private and public, he thus foretold the future. This then was the way he practised his art Aristodemus, becoming king, constantly was ready to show all reasonable favour to the people, and held all the nobles in honour, especially Cleonnis and Damis He maintained good relations with the allies, sending gifts to the Arcadian leaders and to Argos and Sicyon They carried on the war during his reign by means of constant forays with small parties, and made incursions into one another's country at harvest time, the Messenians being supported by the Aicadians in their raids into Laconia. The Argives did not think fit to declare their hatred for the Lacedaemonians beforehand, but prepared to take part in the contest when it came

XI. In the fifth year of the reign of Aristodemus, being exhausted by the length of the war and by their expenditure, after due notice that a battle would be fought, both sides were joined by their allies, the Lacedaemonians by the Corinthians alone of the Peloponnesians, the Messenians by the full muster of the Arcadians and by picked troops from Argos and Sicyon The Lacedaemonians entrusted their centie to the Counthians, Helots and all the neighbouring peoples who were serving with them; they themselves and the kings were posted on the wings in a deeper and closer formation than ever The dispositions of Austodemus and his men were as follows he selected the most serviceable of the aims for all the Arcadians and Messenians who were physically strong and stout-hearted but did not possess powerful weapons, and as the matter was uigent, posted them with the Aigives and Sicyonians, extending the line that they might not be surrounded by the enemy He also took care that they should be drawn up with Mount Ithome in their rear. Placing Cleonnis in command of these troops, he himself and Damis remained in reserve with the light troops consisting of a few slingers or archers, the bulk of the force being physically suited to rapid assaults and retirements and lightly aimed Not all of them possessed a breastplate or shield, but those who lacked them were protected with the skins of goats and sheep, some of them, particularly the Arcadian mountaineers, having the hides of wild beasts, wolves and bears Each carried several javelins, and some of them While these were in ambush in a part of Ithome where they were least likely to be visible, the heavy-armed troops of the Messenians and their allies withstood the first assault of the Lacedaemonians, and continued after this to show courage in every way. They were inferior in numbers to the enemy, but were picked men fighting against levies, not selected troops like themselves, and so, by their bravery and training were more able to maintain a lengthy resistance. Then the mobile Messenian force, when the signal was given to them, charged the Lacedaemonians and enveloping them threw javelins on their flanks. All who were of higher courage 1an in and struck at close quarters The Lacedaemonians, faced simultaneously with a second and unforeseen danger, were not demoralised, but turning on the light troops, tried to defend themselves But, as the enemy with their light equipment drew off without difficulty, the Lacedaemonians were filled with perplexity and, as a consequence, with anger Men are apt to be most annoyed by what they negard as beneath them. So then the Spartans who had already been wounded and all who after the fall of their comrades were the first to meet the attack of the light troops, ian out to meet them when they saw the light troops advancing and hotly extended the pursuit as they retired The Messenian light troops maintained their original tactics, striking and shooting at them when they stood still, and outstripping them in flight when they pursued, attacking again as they tried to retire They did this in separate parties and at different points of the enemy's line The Messenian heavy-armed and their allies meantime pressed more boldly on the troops facing them. Finally the Lacedaemonians, worn out by the length of the battle and their wounds, and demoralised contrary to their custom by the light troops, broke their ranks. When they had been routed, the light troops inflicted greater damage on them. It was impossible to reckon the Lacedaemonian losses in the battle, but I for my part am convinced that they were heavy. The rest made their retreat homewards without molestation, but for the Corinthians it was likely to be difficult, for whether they tried to retire through the Aigolid of by Sieyon, in either case it was through enemy country.

XII The Lacedaemonians were distressed by the reverse that had befallen them. Their losses in the battle were great and included important men, and they were inclined to despair of all hope in the war. For this reason they sent envoys to Delphi, who received the following reply from the Pythia.

"Phoebus bids thee pursue not only the task of war with the hand, but by guile a people holds the Messeman land, and by the same arts as they first employed shall the people fall."

At this the kings and ephors were eager to invent stratagems, but failed. They imitated that deed of Odysseus at Troy, and sent a hundred men to Ithome to observe what the enemy were planning, but pretending to be deserted. A sentence of banishment had been openly pronounced on them. On their animal Anistodemus at once sent them away, saying that the cumes of the Lacedaemonians were new, but their tricks old. Failing in their attempt, the Lacedaemonians next attempted to break up the Messenian alliance. But when repulsed by the Arcadians, to whom their ambassadois came first, they put off going to Argos. Aristodemus, hearing of the Lacedaemonian intrigues, also sent men to enquire of the god. And the Pythia replied to them.

"The god gives thee glory in war, but beware lest by guile the hated company of Sparta scale the well-built walls, for mightier is their god of war. And haish shall be the dwellers in the circle of the dancing ground, when the two have started forth by one chance from the hidden ambush. Yet the holy day shall not behold this ending until their doom o'ertake those which have changed their nature"

At the time Alistodemus and the seers were at a loss to interpret the saying, but in a few years the god was like to reveal it and bring it to fulfilment

Other things befell the Messenians at that time. while Lyciscus was living abroad in Sparta, death overtook the daughter whom he carried with him on his flight from Messene. As he often visited her tomb, Arcadian horsemen lay in wait and captured him When carried to Ithome and brought into the assembly he urged that he had not departed a traitor to his country, but because he believed the words of the seer that the gul was not his own His defence did not win credence until the woman who was then holding the priesthood of Hera came into the theatre. She confessed that she was the mother of the girl and had given her to Lyciscus' wife to pass off as her own "And now," she said, "revealing the secret, I have come to lay down my office" She said this because it was an established custom in Messene that, if a child of a man or woman holding a priesthood died before its parent, the office should pass to another Accepting the truth of her statement, they chose another woman to take her place as priestess of the goddess, and said that Lyciscus' deed was pardonable

After this, as the twentieth year of the war was approaching, they resolved to send again to Delphi to ask concerning victory. The Pithia made answer

Hearing this they thought that the oracle was in their favour and granted them victory; for as they themselves possessed the sanctuary of Zeus of Ithome within the walls, the Lacedaemonians could not forestall them in making the dedication They set about making tripods of wood, as they had not money enough to make them of bronze But one of the Delphians reported the oracle to Sparta When they heard it, no plan occurred to them in public, but Oebalus, a man of no repute in general, but evidently shrewd, made a hundred tripods, as best he might, of clay, and hiding them in a bag, carried nets with them like a hunter was unknown even to most of the Lacedaemonians, he would more easily escape detection by the Mes-Joining some countivmen, he entered Ithome with them, and as soon as night fell, dedicated these tupods of clay to the god, and returned to Sparta to tell the Lacedaemonians The Messenians, when they saw them, were greatly disturbed, thinking, nightly enough, that they were from the Lacedaemonians Nevertheless Aristodemus encouraged them, saving what the occasion demanded, and setting up the wooden tripods, which had already been made, round the altar of the god of Ithome It happened also that Ophioneus, the seer who had been blind from birth, received his sight in the most remarkable way. He was seized with a violent pain in the head, and thereupon received his sight the conquest of the Messenians, the god revealed to them the future. For the armed statue of Artemis. which was all of bronze, let its shield fall. And as Austodemus was about to sacrifice the victims to Zeus of Ithome, the rams of their own accord leapt towards the altar, and dashing their horns violently against it were killed by the force of the blow A third portent befell them. The dogs assembled together and howled every night, and at last fled together to the camp of the Lacedaemonians Aristodemus was alarmed by this and by the following dream which came to him. He thought that he was about to go forth aimed to battle and the victims' entrails were lying before him on a table, when his daughter appeared, wearing a black robe and showing her breast and belly cut open, when she appeared she flung down what was on the table, stripped him of his arms, and instead set a golden crown on his head and put a white robe about him. Austodemus, who was already in despair, thought the dream foretold the end of life for him, because the Messemans used to carry out their chiefs for burial wearing a crown and dressed in white garments Then he received news that Ophioneus the seer could no longer see but had suddenly become blind, as he was at first Then they understood the oracle, that by the two starting forth from the ambush and again meeting their doom the Pythia meant the eyes of Ophioneus Then Aristodemus. reckoning up his private sorrows, that to no purpose he had become the slaver of his daughter, and seeing that no hope of safety remained for his country, slew himself upon the tomb of his child He had done all that human calculation could do to save the Messenians, but fortune brought to naught both his achievements and his plans. He had reigned six years and a few months when he died

The Messenians were plunged into despair, and were even ready to send to the Lacedaemonians to ask mercy, so demoralised were they by the death of Aristodemus Their pride, however, prevented them from doing this. But they met in the assembly and chose not a king, but Damis as general with absolute power. He selected Cleonnis and Phyleus as colleagues, and even with their present resources made ready to some battle For he was forced to this by the blockade, and above all by famine and by the consequent terror that they would be destroyed by want Even then the Messemans were not inferior in courage and brave deeds, but all their generals were killed and their most notable men After this they held out for some five months, but as the year was coming to an end deserted Ithome, the war having lasted twenty years in all, as is stated in the poems of Tvrtaeus

"But in the twentieth year they left their rich tilled lands, and fled from out the lofty mountains of Ithome"

This war came to an end in the first year of the fourteenth Olympiad, when Dasmon of Corinth won the short footrace At Athens the Medontidae were still holding the archonship as a ten years' office, Hippomenes having completed his fourth year.

XIV All the Messenians who had ties with Sieyon and Argos and among any of the Arcadians retired to these states, but those who belonged to the family of the priests and performed the mysteries of the Great Goddesses, to Eleusis. The majority of the common people were scattered in their native towns, as before. The Lacedaemonians first razed Ithome to the ground, then attacked and captured the remaining towns. Of the spoils they dedicated bronze tripods to the god of Amyclae A statue of Aphrodite stands under the first tripod, of Artemis under the second, of Kore or Demeter under the third Dedicating these offerings at Amvelae, they gave to the people of Asine, who had been driven out by the Argives, that part of Messenia on the coast which they still occupy, to the descendants of Androcles (he had a daughter, who with her children had fled at his death and come to Sparta) they assigned the part called Hyamia The Messenians themselves were treated in this way First they exacted an oath that they would never rebel or attempt any kind of revolution. Secondly, though no fixed tribute was imposed on them, they used to bring the half of all the produce of their fields to Sparta It was also ordained that for the funcials of the kings and other magistrates men should come from Messene with their wives in black garments, and a penalty was laid on those who disobeyed. As to the wanton punishments which they inflicted on the Messenians, this is what is said in Tyrtaeus' poems.

"Like asses worn by their great buildens, bringing of dire necessity to their masters the half of all the fruits the corn-land bears"

That they were compelled to share their mourning, he shows by the following:

"Wailing for their masters, they and their wives alike, whensoever the baneful doom of death came upon any."

In these straits the Messenians, foreseeing no kindness from the Lacedaemonians, and thinking death in battle of a complete migration from Peloponnese preferable to their present lot, resolved at all costs to revolt. They were incited to this mainly by the younger men, who were still without experience of war but were of high spirit and prefeired death in a free country, even though slavery might bring happiness in all else. Of the young men who had grown up in Messenia the best and most numerous were round Andania, and among them was Aristomenes, who to this day is worshipped as a hero among the Messenians. They think that even the circumstances of his birth were notable, for they assert that a spirit or a god united with his mother, Nicoteleia, in the form of a serpent. know that the Macedonians tell a similar story about Olympias, and the Sicyonians about Aristodama, but there is this difference: The Messenians do not make Aristomenes the son of Heracles or of Zeus. as the Macedonians do with Alexander and Ammon, and the Sicvonians with Aratus and Asclepius of the Greeks say that Pyrrhus was the father of Aristomenes, but I myself know that in their libations the Messenians call him Aristomenes son of He then, being in the full vigour of Nicomedes youth and comage, with others of the nobles incited them to revolt This was not done openly at first, but they sent secretly to Argos and to the Arcadians, to ask if they were ready to help unhesitatingly and no less energetically than in the former war.

XV. When all their preparations were made for the war, the readiness of their allies exceeding expectation (for now the hatred which the Argives and Arcadians felt for the Lacedaemonians had blazed up openly), they revolted in the thirty-ninth year after the capture of Ithome, and in the fourth year of the twenty-third Olympiad, when Icarus of Hyperesia won the short footrace At Athens the archonship was now of annual tenure, and Tlesias Tyrtaeus has not recoided the names held office of the kings then reigning in Lacedaemon, but Rhianos stated in his epic that Leotychides was king at the time of this war I cannot agree with him at all on this point. Though Tyrtaeus makes no statement, he may be regarded as having done so by the following; there are lines of his which refer to the first war:

"Around it they fought unceasingly for nineteen years, ever maintaining a stout heart, the wairioi fathers of our fathers"

It is obvious then that the Messemans went to wai now in the second generation after the first war, and the sequence of time shows that the kings of Sparta at that time were Anaxander the son of Eurycrates, son of Polydorus, and of the other house Anaxidamus the son of Zeuxidamus, son of Archidamus, son of Theopompus I go as far as the third in descent from Theopompus, because Archidamus the son of Theopompus died before his father, and the kingdom of Theopompus passed to his grandson, Zeuxidamus. But Leotychides clearly succeeded Demaratus the son of Ariston, Ariston being sixth in descent from Theopompus

In the first year after the revolt the Messemans engaged the Lacedaemonians at a place called Derae in Messema, both sides being without their allies. Neither side won a clear victory, but Aristomenes is said to have achieved more than it seemed that one man could, so that, as he was of the race of the Aepytidae, they were for making him king after the battle. As he declined, they appointed him general with absolute power. It was the view of Aristomenes that any man would be ready to die in battle if he had first done deeds worthy of record, but that it was his own especial task at the very beginning of the war to prove that he had struck terros into the Lacedaemonians and that he would be more terrible to them for the future. With this purpose he came by night to Lacedaemon and fixed on the temple of Athena of the Biazen House a shield inscribed "The Gift of Alistomenes to the Goddess, taken from Spaitans"

The Spartans received an oracle from Delphi that they should procure the Athenian as counsellor. they sent messengers to Athens to announce the oracle, asking for a man to advise what they must do The Athenians, who were not anxious either that the Lacedaemonians should add to their possessions the best part of Peloponnese without great dangers, or that they themselves should disobey the god, made their plans accordingly. There was a man Tyrtaeus, a teacher of letters, who was considered of poor intellect and was lame in one foot Him they sent to Sparta On his arrival he recited his poems in elegiacs and anapaests to the nobles in private and to all whom he could collect A year after the fight at Derae, both sides being joined by their allies, they prepared to join battle at the Boar's Tomb, as The Messenians had the Eleians and it is called Arcadians and also succours from Argos and from They were joined by all the Messemans who had previously been in voluntary exile, together with those from Eleusis, whose hereditary task it was to perform the lites of the Gleat desses, and the descendants of Androcles indeed were their most zealous supporters. The Corinthians came to fight on the side of the Lacedaemonians, and some of the Lepreans owing to then hatred of the Eleans But the people of Asine were bound by oaths to both sides. This spot, the Boar's Tomb, lies in Stenyclerus of Messenia, and there, as is said, Heracles exchanged oaths with the sons of Neleus over the pieces of a boar XVI. Sacrifice was offered by the seers on both sides before the battle, on the Lacedaemonian side by Hecas, descendant and namesake of the Hecas who had come with the sons of Austodemus to Sparta, on the Messeman side by Theoclus, who was descended from Eumantis, an Eleian of the house of the Iamidae, whom Cresphontes had brought to Messene. Then in the presence of the seers both sides were spurred by greater ardour for the fight. any manœuvie They themselves with Aristomenes were at first hard pressed in face of Anaxander and the Lacedaemonian champions, but receiving wounds unflinchingly and showing every form of desperate courage they repulsed Anaxander and his men by their long endurance and valour As they fled, Aristomenes ordered another Messenian troop to undertake the He himself attacked the enemies' line where it was filmest, and after bleaking it at this point sought a new point of assault Soon successful here, he was the more ready to assail those who stood their ground until he threw into confusion the whole line of the Lacedaemonians themselves and of their allies They were now running without shame and without waiting for one another, while he assailed them with a terior that seemed more than one man's fury could inspire There was a wild pear-tree growing in the plain, beyond which Theoclus the seer forbade him to pass, for he said that the Dioscuri were seated on the tree. Aristomenes, in the heat of passion did not hear all that the seer said, and when he reached the tree, lost his shield, and his disobedience gave to the Lacedaemonians an opportunity for some to escape from the lout For he lost time trying to recover his shield.

The Lacedaemonians were thrown into despair after this blow and purposed to put an end to the war. But Tyrtaeus by reciting his poems contrived to dissuade them, and filled their ranks from the Helots to replace the slain. When Aristomenes returned to Andania, the women threw ribbons and lay in wait by day for the maidens who were performing the dances in honour of Artemis at Carvae, and capturing those who were wealthiest and of noblest birth, carried them off to a village in Messenia entrusting them to men of his troop to guaid, while he rested for the night. There the young men intoxicated, I suppose, and without any self-control, attempted to violate the guls. When Aristomenes attempted to deter them from an action contrary to Greek usage, they paid no attention, so that he was compelled to kill the most disorderly. He released the captives for a large ransom maidens, as when he captured them

XVII. There is a place Aegila in Lacoma, where is a sanctuary sacred to Demeter Aristomenes and his men knowing that the women were keeping festival there . . the women were inspired by the goddess to defend themselves, and most of the Messenians were wounded with the knives with which the women sacrificed the victims and the spits on which they pierced and loasted the meat Austomenes was struck with the torches and taken alive. Nevertheless he escaped to Messenia during the same night Archidameia the pilestess of Demeter, was charged with having released him, not for a bribe but because she had been in love with him before; but she maintained that Austomenes had escaped by burning through his bonds

In the third year of the war, when an engagement was about to take place at what is called The Great Trench, and the Messenians had been joined by Arcadians from all the cities, the Lacedaemonians bribed Anstocrates the son of Hicetas of Trapezus, who was then king and general of the Arcadians The Lacedaemonians were the first of whom we know to give bribes to an enemy, and the first to make victory in war a matter of purchase the Lacedaemonians committed this crime in the Messenian war in the matter of the treachery of Austociates the Arcadian, the decision in battle was reached by valour and the fortune of heaven Again it is clear that at a later date, when they were lying opposite the Athenian fleet at Aggospotami, the Lacedaemonians bought Adeimantus and other Athenian generals However in course of time the punishment of Neoptolemus, as it is called, came upon the Lacedaemonians themselves in their turn. Now it was the fate of Neoptolemus the son of Achilles, after killing Priam on the altar of Zeus Heikeios (Ot' the Countyard), himself to be slain by the altar of Apollo Thenceforward to suffer what a man has himself done to another is called the Punishment of Neoptolemus So in the case of the Lacedaemonians, when they were at the height of their power after the destruction of the Athenian fleet, and Agesilaus had already reduced the greater part of Asia, they were unable to capture the whole empire of the Persians, but the barbarian over eached them with their own invention, sending money to Corinth, Argos, Athens and Thebes, as the result of this bribery the so-called Corinthian war broke out, compelling Agesilaus to abandon his conquests in Asia

trick employed by the Lacedaemonians against the Messenians to their own destruction. After receiving the money from Lacedaemon, Aristocrates concealed his plot from the Arcadians for the present, but when they were about to come into action, he alarmed them by saving that they were caught in a difficult place and there would be no means of retreat for them, if defeated, also that the offerings had not been satisfactory. He ordered everyone therefore to take to flight when he gave the signal. When the Lacedaemonians were about to close and the Messenians were occupied on then own front, then Aristocrates withdrew the Arcadians as the battle began, leaving the Messenian left and centre without troops For the Arcadians occupied both positions in the absence of the Eleians from the battle and of the Argives and Sicyonians. To complete his work Aristociates caused his men to fly through the Messenians were amazed at the unexpected state of affairs, and moreover were thrown into confusion by the passage of the Arcadians through their ranks, so that they almost forgot what lay before them, for instead of the advance of the Lacedaemonians they watched the Arcadian retirement, some begging them to stand by them, others cuising them for traitors and scoundrels. It was not difficult for the Lacedaemonians to surround the Messenians thus isolated, and they won without trouble the easiest of victories Aristomenes and his men held together and tried to check the fiercest of the Lacedaemonian assaults but, being few in number, were unable to render much assistance. So great were the numbers of the people of the Messenians slain that in lieu of their former thoughts of becoming the masters instead of the slaves of the Lacedaemonians they now despaired of safety itself. Among the chieftains killed were Androcles and Phintas, and Phanas after the most glorious resistance. He had previously been victorious in the long foot race at Olympa.

Aristomenes collected the Messenian survivors after the battle and persuaded them to desert Andama and most of the other towns that lay in the interior and to settle on Mount Erra. When they had been driven to this spot, the Lacedae-monians sat down to besiege them, thinking that they would soon reduce them. Nevertheless the Messenians maintained their resistance for eleven years after the disaster at the Trench. The length of the siege is proved by these lines of the poet Rhianus, regarding the Lacedaemonians.—

"In the folds of the white mountain were they encamped, for two and twenty winters and gieen herbs"

He reckons winters and summers, by "green heibs" meaning the green corn or the time just before harvest

XVIII Settling on Ena and cut off from the rest of Messenia, except in so far as the people of Pylos and Mothone maintained the coastal districts for them, the Messenians plundered both Laconia and their own territory, regarding it now as enemy country. The men taking part in the raids were drawn from all sources, and Aristomenes raised the number of his chosen troop to three hundred. They harried and plundered whatever Lacedaemonian property they could, when coin, cattle and wine were captured they were consumed, but movable property and men were sold The Lacedaemonians, as their labours were more profitable to the men at Eira than to themselves, accordingly resolved that Messenia and the neighbouring part of Laconia should be left uncultivated during the war. As a result scarcity alose in Sparta, and with it revolu-For those who had property here could not endure its lying idle. Their differences were being composed by Tyrtaeus, when Aristomenes and his troop, starting in the late evening and by rapid movement reaching Amvelae before sunrise, captured and plundered the town, retiring before a force from Sparta could come to its relief He continued to overrun the country afterwards, until in an engagement with more than half the Lacedaemonian infantry and both the kings he received various wounds while defending himself and was struck on the head by a stone, so that his eyes became dizzy When he fell a number of the Lacedaemonians closed upon him and took him alive with some fifty of his followers The Lacedaemonians resolved to fling them all into the Ceadas, into which they throw men punished for the greatest crimes The rest of the Messemans were killed at once as they fell, but Aristomenes now as on other occasions was preserved by one of the gods His panegviists say that, when Aristomenes was thrown into the Cendus, an eagle flew below him and supported him with its wings, bringing him to the bottom without any damage to his body and without wound Even from here, as it seems, it was the will of heaven to show him a means of escape For when he came to the bottom of the chasm he lay down, and covering himself with his cloak awaited the death that fate had surely decreed But after two days he heard a noise and uncovered. and being by this time able to see through the gloom, saw a fox devouring the dead bodies Realizing that the beast must have some entrance. he waited for the fox to come near him, and then Whenever it turned on him he used one hand to hold out his cloak for it to bite most part he kept pace with it as it ran, but over the more difficult ground he was dragged along At last he saw a hole big enough for a fox to get through and daylight showing through it The fox, when released by Austomenes made off, presumably, to its earth But Aristomenes enlarged the hole, which was not large enough to let him through, with his hands and reached his home at Eira in safety, having undergone a remarkable chance in the matter of his capture, for his courage and prowess were so high that no one would have expected Aristomenes to be made a piisoner more remarkable, and a convincing example of divine assistance, was his escape from the Ceadas.

XIX. The Lacedaemonians at once received information from deserters that Aristomenes had retuined in safety Though they thought it as incredible as the news that anyone had usen from the dead, their belief was ensured by the following action on the part of Aristomenes himself. The Counthians were sending a force to assist the Lacedaemonians in the reduction of Ena Learning from his scouts that their march discipline was lax and that their encampments were made without precaution, Austomenes attacked them by night. He slew most of them while the rest were still sleeping, and killed the leaders Hypermenides, Achladaeus, Lysistratus and Sidectus. And having plundered the generals' tent, he made it clear to the Spartans that it was Alistomenes and no other Messenian who had done this. He also made the sacrifice called the Offering for the hundred slain to Zeus of Ithome This was an old-established custom, all Messenians making it who had slain their hundred enemies, Austomenes first offered it after the battle at the Boar's Tomb, his second offering was occasioned by the slaughter of the Counthians in the night is said that he made a third offering as the result of his later raids Now the Lacedaemonians, as the festival of Hyacinthus was approaching, made a truce of forty days with the men of Ena themselves returned home to keep the feast, but some Cretan archers, whom they had summoned as mercenaries from Lyctus and other cities, were patiolling Messenia for them. Aristomenes then, in view of the truce, was at a distance from Ena and was advancing somewhat carelessly, when seven of these archers laid an ambush for him They captured him and bound him with the thongs which they had on their quivers, as evening was coming on So two of them went to Sparta, bringing the glad news that Austomenes had been captured The rest went to one of the farms in Messenia, where there dwelt a fatherless girl with her mother On the previous night the girl had seen a dream Wolves brought a lion to their farm bound and without talons, but she herself loosed the hon from his bonds and found and gave to him his talons, and thus it seemed that the wolves were toin in pieces by the lion. And now when the Cretans brought in Aristomenes, the gul realised that the dream of the night had come true. and asked her mother who he was On learning she was encouraged, and looking intently at him understood what she had been bidden to do Accordingly she plied the Cretans with wine, and when they were overcome with drunkenness she stole away the dagger of the man who was sleeping most heavily Then the gul cut the bonds of Austomenes, and he took the sword and despatched the men. maiden was taken to wife by Gorgus the son of Aristomenes Alistomenes gave him to the gul as a recompense for saving his life, for Gorgus had not vet completed his eighteenth year when he wedded her.

XX But in the eleventh year of the siege it was fated that Ena should be taken and the Messenians dispersed, and the god fulfilled for them an oracle given to Aristomenes and Theoclus They had come to Delphi after the disaster at the Trench and asked concerning safety, receiving this reply from the Pythia

"Whensoever a he-goat drinks of Neda's winding stream, no more do I protect Messene, for destruction is at hand."

The springs of the Neda are in Mount Lycaeus The river flows through the land of the Arcadians and turning again towards Messenia forms the boundary on the coast between Messenia and Elis Then they were afraid of the he-goats drinking from the Neda, but it appeared that what the god foretold to them was this Some of the Greeks call the wild fig-tree olynthe, but the Messenians themselves tragos (he-goat) Now at that time a wild fig-tree growing on the bank of the Neda had not grown straight up, but was bending towards the stream and touching the water with the tips of its leaves When the seei Theoclus saw it, he guessed that the goat who drinks of the Neda foretold by the Pythia was this wild figtree, and that their fate had already come upon the Messenians He kept it secret from the rest, but led Austomenes to the fig-tree and showed him that their time of safety had gone by Austomenes believed that it was so and that there was no delaying their fate, and made provision such as circumstances demanded For the Messenians possessed a secret thing If it were destroyed, Messene would be overwhelmed and lost for ever, but if it were kept, the oracles of Lycus the son of Pandion said that after lapse of time the Messenians would recover their country. Anistomenes, knowing the oracles, took it towards nightfall, and coming to the most deserted part of Ithome, builed it on the mountain, calling on Zeus who keeps Ithome and the gods who had hitherto protected the Messenians to remain guardians of the pledge, and not to put their only hope of return into the power of the Lacedaemonians

After this, as formerly for the Trojans, the beginning of the Messenian misfortunes was in adulterv The Messenians commanded the mountain of Ena and its slopes as far as the Neda, some of them having their dwellings outside the gates The only deserter that came to them from Laconia was a heidsman, slave of Emperamus, bringing his master's cattle Emperamus was a man of repute in Sparta This heidsman, who kept his cattle not far from the Neda, saw the wife of one of the Messenians, who had then dwellings outside the wall, as she came to draw water Falling in love with her, he dated to speak with her and seduced her with gifts Thenceforward he marked the time when her husband went away to mount guard, garrison duty on the acropolis being undertaken by the Messenians in For it was at this point that they were most afraid of the enemy making their way into the town Whenever he went away, then the heidsman used to visit the lady Now once when it happened that the turn for duty fell to him and others in the night, it chanced that there was heavy iain, and the Messenians deserted their post. For they were overcome by the density of the rain that streamed from heaven, as there were no battlements or towers elected on the wall owing to the hurried nature of its building, moreover they did not expect the Lacedaemonians even to stir on a moonless night that was so stormy A few days earlier a merchant from Cephallenia, who was a fixend of Aristomenes and was bringing to Ena all that they needed, had been captured by the Lacedaemonians and aichers from Aptera, commanded by Euryalus the Spartan, Austomenes rescued him and recovered all the goods that he was bringing, but had himself been wounded and was unable to visit jounds, as was his This was the main reason that the acropolis was deserted All of them left their posts and with them the husband of the woman seduced by the herdsman She was entertaining the herdsman at the time but heard her husband coming and at once hid the man away as quickly as possible When the husband entered, she treated him with greater affection than ever before and asked him what was the reason of his ietuin Not knowing that she was unfaithful or that the herdsman was in the house, he told her the truth, that owing to the violence of the rain he and all the rest had deserted their post The heidsman listened to him speaking. and learning the exact position, again described from the Messenians to the Lacedaemonians were absent at the time from the Lacedaemonian camp, but Emperamus, his master, who was commandant, was conducting the siege of Ena Coming to him he first begged forgiveness for his crime of deserting and then showed him that now was the time for them to take Eira, recounting everything that he had learnt from the Messenian

XXI His story seemed to be reliable, and he led the way for Emperamus and the Spartans march was difficult, as it was dark and the rain never Nevertheless they accomplished it in their eageiness, and airiving before the actopolis of Eira, mounted by raising ladders and in any other way that was possible Various indications of the trouble that was upon them were given to the Messenians, especially by the dogs banking, not in their usual fashion, but uttering more loud and continuous howls Realising that the supreme and most desperate crisis had come upon them, they did not wait to collect all then aims but snatched whatever lay ready to the hand of each, to defend the fatherland that alone was left to them of all Messenia. The first to realise that the enemy were within and to go against them were Gorgus the son of Aristomenes, Aristomenes himself, Theoclus the seei and Manticlus his son, and with them Euergetidas a man of high repute in Messenia who had attained to greater honour through his wife, for he was wedded to Hagnagora, the sister of Austomenes Then the rest, though understanding that they were caught as in a net, nevertheless derived some hope even from their present plight. But Austomenes and the seer knew that there was no putting off destruction for the Messenians, for they knew the riddle of the oracle which the Pythia had uttered concerning the goat Nevertheless they would not declare it, and kept it secret from the rest As they hastened through the city, visiting all, they exhorted those whom they encountered, when they saw that they were Messenians, to be brave men, and summoned from the houses those who still remained During the night nothing worthy of mention was done on either side, for their ignorance of the ground and the daring of Austomenes gave pause to the Lacedaemonians, while the Messenians had not previously received a watchword from their generals, and the rain would put out torches or any other light that they kindled When it was day and they could see one another, Aristomenes and Theoclus tried to rouse the fury of despan in the Messenians, setting forth all that suited the occasion and reminding them of the valour of the men of Smyrna, how, though an Ionian people, by their valour and courage they had driven out Gyges the son of Dascylus and the Lydians, when they were in occupation of their town Messemans, when they heard, were filled with desperate courage, and mustering as they happened to be gathered rushed on the Lacedaemonians too were eager to fling tiles and what they could upon the enemy, yet the violence of the rain prevented them from doing this and from mounting to the housetops But they dated to take aims, and they too further inflamed the ardour of the men, when they saw their women preferring to perish with their fatherland rather than be taken as slaves to Lacedaemon, so that they might yet have been able to escape their fate. But the god caused the rain to descend more densely, with loud claps of thunder, and dazzled their eyes with lightning flashing in their faces this put courage in the Lacedaemonians, who said that heaven itself was helping them, and as the lightning was on their night, Hecas the seer declared the sign of good omen It was he who devised the following plan The Lacedaemonians far outnumbered the Messemans, but as the battle was not being fought on open ground with troops in line, but they were fighting over different quarters of the town, the real most of each detachment were rendered useless Hecas ordered these to retire to the camp, take food and sleep, and return before evening to relieve their own men who were to remain on duty The Lacedaemonians, by testing and fighting by turns, held out the longer, but the Messenians were faced with difficulties on all sides They fought continuously day and night until the third day with none to relieve them When the next day dawned, worn out by lack of sleep and by the rain and cold from heaven, they were assailed by hunger and thrist The women especially, unaccustomed to war, were exhausted by the continuous suffering So the seer Theoclus came to Aristomenes' side and said . "Why vainly maintain this toil? The decree of fate stands fast that Messene should fall, long since the Pythia declared to us the disaster now before our eyes, and lately the fig-tree revealed it. On me the gods have laid one doom with my country, but do thou save the Messenians with what power thou hast and save thyself" When he had spoken to Austomenes he rushed upon the enemy, and these were the words that he was constrained to fling at the Lacedaemonians 'Yet not for all time shall you enjoy the finits of Messenia with impunity" Then falling upon the men who faced him he killed them and himself was wounded, and having sated his passion with the slaughter of his foes, he breathed his last But Austomenes called the Messenians back from the fight, except those who by virtue of their courage were fighting to cover them These he allowed to remain at their post. The rest he ordered to receive the women and children within then ranks and follow him wherever he should show a passage He appointed Gorgus and Manticlus to command the rear, he himself ran to the head of the company and by the gestures of his head and movement of his spear signified that he asked a passage and had resolved to depart Emperamus and the Spartans present were pleased to let the Messenians pass, without further inflaming men who had reached the bounds of frenzy and despan Moreover Hecas the seer ordered them to act thus from Lacedaemon, refused to lead them, and said that he knew that no Messenian survived for them to help When they obtained more certain news, that they survived and had been forced to desert Ena, they themselves proposed to receive them at Mount Lycaeus after preparing clothing and food, and sent some of their leading men to comfort the Messemans and also to be their guides on the way. After their safe arrival at Mount Lycaeus, the Arcadians entertained them and treated them kindly in every way, offering to distribute them among their towns and to make a new distribution of their land on their account But Austomenes' grief for the sack of Ena and his hatred of the Lacedaemonians suggested to him the following plan. He chose from the body of the Messenians five hundred men, whom he knew to be the most unspaining of themselves, and asked them in the hearing of Aristociates and the rest of the Arcadians if they were ready to die with him, avenging their country He did not know that Austocrates was a traitor, for he thought that he had fled from the battle formerly from lack of courage and through cowardice, not for any knavery, so he asked the five hundred in his pre-When they said that they were ready, he revealed the whole plan, that he proposed at all costs to lead them against Sparta during the following evening For now was the time when the majority of the Lacedaemonians was away at Eira, and others were scouring Messenia for booty and plunder. "If we can capture and occupy Sparta," said Aristomenes, "we can give back to the Lace-

If we fail, we shall die together, having done a deed for posterity to remember" When he said this, as many as three hundred of the Arcadians were ready to shale his enterprise For the time they delayed then departure, as the victims were unfavourable, but on the following day they learnt that the Lacedaemonians had been forewained of their secret, and that they themselves had been a second time betrayed by Aristociates For Aristociates had at once written the designs of Alistomenes in a letter, and having entiusted it to the slave whom he knew to be most loyal, sent him to Anaxandei in Spaita As the slave was returning, he was intercepted by some of the Arcadians, who had formerly been at variance with Austociates and regarded him then with some suspicion Having intercepted the slave they brought him before the Arcadians and made known to the people the answer from Lacedaemon Anaxander was writing that his retreat from the Great Trench formerly had not gone unrewarded on the part of the Lacedaemonians and that he would receive an additional recompense for his information on the present occasion. When this was declared to all, the Arcadians themselves stoned Aristociates and uiged the Messenians to join them looked to Austomenes. But he was weeping, with his eyes fixed on the ground So the Arcadians stoned Austociates to death and flung him beyond then borders without burial, and set up a tablet in the precinct of Zeus Lycaeus with the words

XXIII All the Messenians, who were captured about Ena or anywhere else in Messenia, were reduced by the Lacedaemonians to seifdom people of Pylos and Mothone and all who occupied the maritime district retired in ships on the capture of Ena to Cyllene, the port of the Eleians Thence they sent to the Messenians in Aicadia, proposing to unite their forces and seek a new country to dwell in, enjoining Austomenes to lead them to a colony But he said that while he lived, he would make was on the Lacedaemonians, as he knew well that trouble would always be brewing for Sparta through him, but he gave them Goigus and Manticlus as leaders Euergetidas too had retired to Mount Lycaeus with the rest of the Messenians From there, when he saw that Aristomenes' plan to seize Sparta had failed, he persuaded some fifty of the Messenians to go back with him to Ena and attack the Lacedaemonians, and coming upon them while they were still plundering, he turned then celebrations of victory to grief He then met his doom there, but Aiistomenes ordered all the Messenians who wished to take part in the colony to join the leaders at Cyllene And all took part except those debaned by age or lack of funds for

Ena was taken, and the second war between the Lacedaemonians and Messenians completed in the archonship of Autosthenes at Athens, and in the first year of the twenty-eighth Olympiad, when Chionis the Laconian was victorious

When the Messenians assembled at Cyllene, they resolved to winter there for that season, the Eleians providing a market and funds. With the spring they began to debate where they should go was the view of Goigus that they should occupy Zacynthos off Cephallenia, becoming islanders instead of mainlanders, and raid the coasts of Laconia with their ships and ravage the land But Manticlus bade them forget Messene and then hatred of the Lacedaemonians, and sail to Saidinia and win an island which was of the largest extent and greatest fertility Meantime Anaxilas sent to the Messenians and summoned them to Italy He was triant of Rhegium, third in descent from Alcidamidas, who had left Messene for Rhegium after the death of king Austodemus and the capture of Ithome So now this Anaxilas summoned the Messenians When they came, he said that the people of Zancle were at war with him, and that they possessed a prosperous land and city well placed in Sicily, and these he said he was ready to give them and help them to conquei When they accepted the proposal, Anaxilas then transported them to Sicily

Zancle was originally occupied by pirates, who, as the land was uninhabited, walled off the harbour and used it as a base for their raids and cruises Their leaders were Ciataemenes a Samian and Petieres of Chalcis Later Petieres and Ciataemenes resolved to introduce other Greek settlers Anaxilas defeated the Zanclaeans, when they put to sea to oppose him, and the Messenians did the like by land, and the Zanclaeans, blockaded on land by the Messemans and from the sea by the fleet of the Rhegines, when their wall was carried, fled for refuge to the altars of the gods and to the temples Anaxilas, however, advised the Messenians to put to death the suppliant Zanclaeans and to enslave the rest together with the women and children But Gorgus and Manticlus besought Anaxilas not to compel them, the victims of unholy treatment at the hands of kinsmen, to do the like to men of Greek race After this they made the Zanclaeans rise from the altais, and exchanging pledges with them, dwelt together in common They changed the name of the city from Zancle to Messene This event took place in the twenty-ninth Olympiad, when Chionis the Laconian was victorious for the second time Miltiades was archon at Athens Manticlus founded the temple of Heiacles for the Messemans, the temple of the god is outside the walls and he is called Heracles Manticlus, just as Ammon in Libya

XXIV After declining the leadership of the men setting forth to found a colony, Austomenes gave his sister Hagnagora in marriage to Tharys at Phigalia, and his daughters, both the eldest and the next in age, to Damothoidas of Lepieum and Theopompus of Heiaea He himself went to Delphi to enquire of the god The reply that was given to Austomenes is not recorded, but when Damagetus the Rhodian, who reigned at Ialysos, came to Apollo and asked whence he should take a wife, the Pythia bade him take a daughter of the biavest of the Greeks As Aristomenes had a third daughter, he married her, considering that Aristomenes was by far the bravest of the Greeks of that age menes, coming to Rhodes with his daughter, purposed to go up from there to Saidis to Ardys the son of Gyges, and to Ecbatana of the Medes to king Phraortes But eie that he was overtaken by illness and death, for no further misfortune was to befall the Lacedaemonians at the hands of Austomenes On his death Damagetus and the Rhodians built him a splendid tomb and paid honour to him thenceforward I omit what is recorded of the Diagonidae in Rhodes, as they are called, a line sprung from Diagoras the son of Damagetus, son of Dorieus, who was the son of Damagetus and of the daughter of Aristomenes, lest it should seem to be irrelevant. Now the Lacedaemonians, gaining possession of Messenia, divided it all among themselves, except the land belonging to the people of Asine; but they gave Mothone to the men of Nauplia, who had recently been driven from their town by the Argues

The Messenians who were captured in the country, reduced by force to the position of serfs, were later moved to revolt from the Lacedaemonians in the seventy-ninth Olympiad, when Xenophon the Cointhian was victorious Archimedes was archon at The occasion which they found for the revolt was this Certain Lacedaemonians who had been condemned to death on some charge fled as suppliants to Taenarum, but the board of ephors dragged them from the altar there and put them to As the Spartans paid no heed to their being suppliants, the wrath of Poseidon came upon them, and the god razed all their city to the ground At this disaster all the serfs who were of Messeman origin seceded to Mount Ithome Against them the Lacedaemonians, amongst other allies, called to their assistance Cimon the son of Miltiades, then pation in Athens, and an Athenian force. But when the Athenians arrived, they seem to have regarded them with suspicion that they were likely to promote revolution, and as a result of this suspicion to have soon dismissed them from Ithome The Athenians, realizing the feelings of the Lacedaemonians towards them, made friends therefore with the Aigives, and gave Naupactus to the Messenians besieged in Ithome, when they were allowed to depart under a truce. They had taken Naupactus from the Locrians adjoining Aetolia, called the Ozolian. The retriement of the Messenians from Ithome was secured by the strength of the place, also the Pythia announced to the Lacedaemonians that assuredly they would be punished if they committed a crime against the suppliant of Zeus of Ithome. For this reason then they were allowed to go from Peloponnese under a truce

XXV When they occupied Naupactus it was not enough for them to have received a city and country at the hands of the Athemans, but they were filled with a strong desire to show that they had won something notable with their own hands Knowing that the Acamanians of Oemadae possessed a good land and were continually at war with the Athenians, they marched against them They had no numerical advantage, but defeating them by their superior courage, they shut them up in the fortiess and besieged them They neglected no human invention in the matter of siege-craft, tried to carry the town by raising scaling-ladders, mined the walls, and by bringing up such engines as could be made ready at short notice proceeded with the destruction of the fortifications The inhabitants, fearing that if the city were taken they would be put to death and their wives and children enslaved, elected to withdraw on terms.

The Messemans held the town and occupied the country for about a year. In the following year the Acarnanians collected a force from all them towns and discussed an attack on Naupactus. They rejected this, as they saw that their line of march would be through the Aetohans, who were always their enemies, moreover they suspected that the men of Naupactus possessed a fleet, which was the fact, and while they commanded the sea, it was impossible to achieve anything of importance with a land force So they changed their plans and at once turned on the Messenians in Oeniadae and prepared to besiege them, for they never supposed that men so few in number would show such desperate courage as to fight against the full levy of the Acarnanians The Messenians had previously prepared food and all else that was requisite, expecting to stand a long siege But they were determined before the siege was formed to fight a battle in the open, and being Messenians, who had not been surpassed in valour even by Lacedaemonians, but in fortune only, were determined not to be dismayed at the horde which had come from Acainania They recalled the achievement of the Athenians at Marathon, how thirty myriad Peisians had been destroyed by men not numbering ten thousand they joined battle with the Acainanians, and the course of the battle is said to have been thus enemy, being far superior in numbers, had no difficulty in surrounding the Messenians, except where prevented by the gates in the Messenian rear and by the zealous help of their men posted on the wall. Here they could not be surrounded, but the Acarnanians enveloped both their flanks and shot volleys at them from all sides The Messenians, in close formation, whenever they charged the Acarnamians in a body, threw the enemy at that point into confusion, killing and wounding many of them, but they could not effect a complete rout For wherever the Acainanians saw a part of their own line being broken by the Messemans they went to the support of their harassed troops at this point and checked the Messenians, overwhelming them by numbers The Messenians, beaten back and again attempting to pierce the massed troops of the Acainanians at another point, would meet with the same result Wherever they attacked, they threw the enemy into confusion and drove them a short distance, but as the Acarnanians again streamed eageily to this point, they were driven back against their will The battle was evenly contested until evening, but when at nightfall the Acamanians received reinforcements from their cities, the blockade of the Messenians was formed They had no fear of the wall being taken by assault, either by the Acainanians scaling it or by themselves being forced to abandon their posts. But in the eighth month all their provisions alike had been consumed They shouted to the Acarnanians from the wall in mockery that then supplies would not fail them until the tenth year of the siege, but they themselves sallied out of Oeniadae at the time of the first sleep. Their escape became known to the Acainanians and they were compelled to fight, losing some three hundred and killing still more of the enemy But the greater part of them got through the Acarnanians, and reaching the territory of the Aetolians, who were their friends, arrived safely at Naupactus

XXVI Afterwards, as at all times, they were stiried by their hatred against the Lacedaemonians, and provided the most striking example of their hostility towards them in the war which took place between the Peloponnesians and the Athenians For they offered Naupactus as a base against Peloponnese, and Messenian slingers from Naupactus helped to capture the Spartans cut off in Sphacteria When the Athenian reverse at Aegospotami took place. the Lacedaemonians, having command of the sea, then drove the Messenians from Naupactus, they went to then kinsmen in Sicily and to Rhegium, but the majority came to Libya and to the Euesperitae there, who had suffered severely in war with bai barian neighbours and were inviting any Greek to join So the majority of the Messenians went to them, their leader being Comon, who had commanded them in Sphacteria

A year before the victory of the Thebans at Leuctra, heaven foretold their return to Peloponnese to the Messenians. It is said that in Messene on the Straits the priest of Heracles saw a vision in a dream. It seemed that Heracles Manticlus was bidden by Zeus as a guest to Ithome. Also among the Euesperitae Comon dreamt that he lay with his dead mother, but that afterwards she came to life again. He hoped that as the Athenians had recovered their sea-power, they would be restored to Naupactus But the dream really indicated the recovery of Messene. Not long afterwards the Lacedaemonians suffered at Leuctia the disaster that had long been due. For at the end of the oracle given to Aristodemus, who reigned over the Messenians, are the words.

"Act as fate wills, destruction comes on this man before that," signifying that he and the Messenians must suffer evil at the present, but that hereafter destruction would overtake Lacedaemon Then after victory at Leuctra the Thebans sent messengers to Italy, Sicily and to the Euesperitae, and summoned the Messenians to Peloponnese from every other quarter where they might be, and they, with longing for their country and through the hatred which had ever remained with them for the Lacedaemonians, assembled quicker than could have been expected To Epaminondas it seemed in no way easy to found a city that could resist the Lacedaemonians, noi could he discover where in the land to build it For the Messenians refused to settle again in Andania and Oechalia, because their disasters had befallen them when they dwelt there To Epaminondas in his difficulty it is said that an ancient man, closely resembling a priest of Demeter, appeared in the night and said "My gift to thee is that thou shalt conquer whomsoever thou dost assail, and when thou dost pass from men, Theban, I will cause thy name to be unforgotten and give thee glory But do thou restore to the Messenians their fatherland and cities, for now the wrath of the Dioscuri against them hath ceased " This he said to Epaminondas, and revealed this to Epiteles the son of Aeschines, who had been chosen by the Argives to be their general and to refound Messene He was bidden by the dream, wherever he found vew and myrtle growing on Ithome, to dig between them and recover the old woman, for, shut in her brazen chamber, she was overcome and well-nigh fainting. When day dawned, Epiteles went to the appointed place, and as he dug, came upon a brazen urn He took it at once to Epaminondas, told him the dream and bade him remove the lid and see what was within. Epaminondas, after sacrifice and prayer to the vision that had appeared, opened the uin and having opened it found some tin foil, very thin, rolled like a On it were inscribed the mysteries of the Great Goddesses, and this was the pledge deposited by Anstomenes. They say that the man who appeared to Epiteles and Epaminondas in their sleep was Caucon, who came from Athens to Messene the daughter of Triopas at Andania

XXVII The wrath of the sons of Tyndareus against the Messemans began before the battle in Stenyclerus, and arose, I think, for the following reason Panormus and Gonippus of Andania, young men in the bloom of youth, were close friends in all things, and marched together into battle and on laids into Laconia The Lacedaemonians were keeping a feast of the Dioscuri in camp and had turned to drinking and sports after the midday meal, when Gonippus and Panoimus appeared to them, niding on the finest horses and dressed in white tunics and scailet cloaks, with caps on their heads and spears in their hands. When the Lacedaemonians saw them they bowed down and prayed, thinking that the Dioscuii themselves had come to their sacrifice When once they had come among them, the youths rode right through them, striking with their spears, and when many had been killed, returned to Andania, having outraged the sacrifice to the Dioscuii It was this, in my view, that roused the Diosculi to their hatred of the Messenians But now, as the dream declared to Epaminondas, the Dioscuri no longer opposed the return of the Epaminondas was most strongly drawn Messenians to the foundation by the oracles of Bacis, who was inspired by the Nymphs and left prophecies regarding others of the Greeks as well as the return of the Messenians

"Then indeed shall the bright bloom of Sparta perish and Messene again shall be inhabited for all time"

I have discovered that Bacis also told in what manner Eira would be captured, and this too is one of his oracles.

"The men of Messene o'ercome by the thunder's roll and spouting rain"

When the mysteries were recovered, all who were of the puestly family set them down in books. As Epaminondas considered the spot where the city of the Messenians now stands most convenient for the foundation, he ordered enquiry to be made by the seers if the favour of the gods would follow him here When they announced that the offerings were auspicious, he began preparations for the foundation, ordering stone to be brought, and summoning men skilled in laying out streets and in building houses, temples, and ring-walls When all was in leadiness, victims being provided by the Arcadians, Epaminondas himself and the Thebans then sacrificed to Dionysus and Apollo Ismenius in the accustomed manner, the Argives to Argive Hera and Nemean Zeus, the Messenians to Zeus of Ithome and the Dioscuii, and their pilests to the Great Goddesses and Caucon And together they summoned heroes to return and dwell with them, first Messene the daughter of Triopas, after her Eurytus, Aphareus and his children, and of the sons of Heracles Cresphontes and Aepytus But the loudest summons from all alike was to Aristomenes For that day they were engaged in sacrifice and prayer, but on the following days they raised the circuit of the walls, and within built houses and the temples They worked to the sound of music, but only from Boeotian and Argive flutes, and the tunes of Sacadas and Pronomus were brought into keen competition The city itself was given the name Messene, but they founded other towns. The men of Nauplia were not disturbed at Mothone, and they allowed the people of Asine to remain in their home, remembering their kindness when they refused to join the Lacedaemonians in the war against them. The men of Nauplia on the return of the Messenians to Peloponnese brought them such gifts as they had, and while praying continually to the gods for their return begged the Messenians to grant protection to themselves.

The Messenians returned to Peloponnese and recovered their own land two hundred and eightyseven years after the capture of Ena, in the archonship of Dyscinetus at Athens and in the third year of the hundred and second Olympiad, when Damon of Thurn was victorious for the second time no short time for the Plataeans that they were in exile from their country, and for the Delians when they settled in Adramyttium after being expelled from their island by the Athenians The Minyae, driven by the Thebans from Orchomenos after the battle of Leuctra, were restored to Boeotia by Philip the son of Amyntas, as were also the Plataeans When Alexander had destroyed the city of the Thebans themselves, Cassander the son of Antipater rebuilt it after a few years The exile of the Plataeans seems to have lasted the longest of those mentioned, but even this was not for more than two generations But the wanderings of the Messenians outside the Peloponnese lasted almost three hundied

XXVIII. After then return they had nothing to fear at first from the Lacedaemonians For the Lacedaemonians, restrained by fear of the Thebans. submitted to the foundation of Messene and to the gathering of the Arcadians into one city But when the Phocian or, as it is called, the Sacred War caused the Thebans to withdraw from Peloponnese, the Lacedaemonians regained coulage and could no longer refrain from attacking the Messenians The Messenians maintained the war with the help of the Argives and Arcadians, and asked the Athenians for They refused to join in an attack on Laconia, but promised to render assistance in person if the Lacedaemonians began was and invaded Messenia Finally the Messenians formed an alliance with Philip the son of Amyntas and the Macedonians, it was this, they say, that prevented them from taking part in the battle which the Greeks fought at They refused, however, to bear arms Chaeroneia against the Greeks After the death of Alexander, when the Greeks had raised a second war against the Macedonians, the Messenians took part, as I have shown earlier in my account of Attica 1 They did not join the Greeks against the Gauls, as Cleonymus and the Lacedaemonians refused to grant them a truce

Not long afterwards the Messenians occupied Elis, employing strategy and daring alike Eleians in the earliest times were the most lawabiding of the Peloponnesians, but when Philip the son of Amyntas did all the harm to Greece that has been related, he also bribed the leading men in Elis, the Eleians were divided by factions for the first time and came to blows, it is said Henceforward it was likely to be more easy for quarrels to ause among men whose counsels were divided on account of the Lacedaemonians, and they arrived at civil war. Learning this, the Lacedaemonians were preparing to assist their partisans in Elis While they were being organized in squadrons and distributed in companies, a thousand picked Messenian troops arrived humiedly at Elis with Laconian blazons on their shields Seeing their shields, all the Laconising party in Elis thought their supporters had arrived and received them into the fortress But having obtained admission in this way, the Messenians drove out the supporters of the Lacedaemonians and made over the city to their own partisans trick is Homei's, but the Messenians plainly imitated it opportunely, for Homer represents Patroclus in the Iliad 1 clad in the aims of Achilles, and says that the barbanans were filled with the belief that it was Achilles attacking them, and that their front ranks were thrown into confusion Other stratagems are the invention of Homer, the coming of the two Greek spies by night among the Trojans, instead of

Again, the Trojans who, through youth or years were not of fighting age, he posted as garrison of the walls, while the men of military age were encamped against the Greeks. The wounded Greeks in Homer aim the fighting men, so that even they may not be altogether idle. Indeed Homer's ideas have proved useful to men in every matter

XXIX Not long after the affair at Elis, the Macedonians and Demetrius the son of Philip, son of Demetiius,3 captured Messene I have already, in my account of Sievon,4 nariated most of the crimes of Perseus against Philip himself and against Demetiius the son of Philip These are the facts relating to the capture of Messene Philip was in need of money, and as it was necessary to laise it at all costs, he sent Demetrius with a fleet to Peloponnese He put in to one of the less fiequented harbours of the Argolid, and at once marched his aimy by the shortest route to Messene. With an advance guard consisting of all the lightaimed troops who knew the road to Ithome, he succeeded just before dawn in scaling the wall unnoticed at a point where it lay between the city and the peak of Ithome When day dawned and the inhabitants had realised the danger that beset them, they were at first under the impression that the Lacedaemonians had forced an entry into the town, and attacked them more recklessly owing to their ancient hatred. But when they discovered from their equipment and speech that it was the Macedonians and Demetrius the son of Philip, they were filled with great fear, when they considered the Macedonian training in waifare and the good fortune which they saw that they enjoyed in all their ventures Nevertheless the magnitude of the present evil caused them to display a courage beyond their strength, also they were inspired with hope for the best, since it seemed not without divine help that they had accomplished their return to Peloponnese after so long an absence So the Messenians in the town went against the Macedonians full of courage, and the gairison on the acropolis attacked from the high ground above. In like manner the Macedonians, brave and experienced troops, at first offered a firm resistance But worn out by their march, attacked by the men and bombaided with tiles and stones by the women, they took to flight in disorder The majority were pushed over the precipices and killed, for Ithome is very steep at this point. A few escaped by throwing away their aims

The Messemans refrained at first from joining the Achaean league for the following reason, I think When Pyrrhus the son of Aeacides made war on the Lacedaemonians, they came unasked to their assistance, and as a result of this service a more peaceful disposition towards them came to be established at Sparta. Therefore they were unwilling to revive the feud by joining the league, which was openly declared the bitterest enemy of the Lacedaemonians I realise, as of course did the Messenians, that even without their joining the league the policy of the Achaeans was hostile to the Lacedaemonians the Argives and the Aicadian group formed not the smallest element in the league However, in the course of time they joined the league And not long afterwards Cleomenes the son of Leonidas, son of Cleonymus, captured the Arcadian Megalopolis in peace-time 1 Of the people of Megalopolis who were caught in the city, some were killed at the time of its capture, but Philopoemen the son of Claugis and all who withdrew with him (the number of the citizens who escaped is said to have been more than two-thirds) were received by the Messenians, who for the sake of the former services rendered by the Aicadians in the time of Aiistomenes and again at the founding of Messene now repaid the like Such, it would seem, are the vicissitudes of human affairs, that it was the will of heaven that the Messenians should in their tuin pieseive the Arcadians, and what is still more surprising, that they should capture Sparta they fought against Cleomenes at Sellasia and joined with Aratus and the Achaeans to capture When the Lacedaemonians were aid of Sparta Cleomenes there rose to power a treat Machanidas, and after his death a second tyrant arose in Nabis. As he plundered human property and robbed temples alike, he amassed vast wealth in a short time and with it iaised an army This Nabis seized Messene, but when Philopoemen and the people of Megalopolis arrived during the same night, the Spartan tyrant retired on terms But the Achaeans after this. having some quarrel with the Messemans, invaded them with all their forces and lavaged most of the On a second occasion they mustered when the coin was ripe to invade Messenia But Deinocrates, the head of the government, who had been chosen to command the Messenians on that occasion, compelled Lycortas and his force to retire without effecting anything, by occupying beforehand the passes from Aicadia into Messenia with the Messenians from the city and troops from the surrounding districts that came to their assistance Philopoemen arrived with a few cavality some time later than the force with Lycoitas and had been unable to obtain any news of it, the Messenians, having the advantage of the high ground, defeated him and took him I will narrate the manner of Philopoemen's capture and death in my account of Arcadia later 1 The Messenians, who were responsible for his death, were punished and Messene was again brought into the Achaean league

Hitherto my account has dealt with the many sufferings of the Messenians, how fate scattered them to the ends of the earth, far from Peloponnese, and afterwards brought them safely home to their own country. Let us now turn to a description of the country and cities

XXX There is in our time a city Abia in Messenia on the coast, some twenty stades distant from the Choenius valley. They say that this was formerly called Ire and was one of the seven cities which Homer says that Agamemnon promised to Achilles 1 When Hyllus and the Dorians were defeated by the Achaeans, it is said that Abia, nurse of Glenus the son of Heracles, withdrew to Ire, and settling there built a temple to Heracles, and that afterwards for this reason Cresphontes, amongst other honours assigned to her, renamed the city after Abia There was a notable temple of Heracles here, and also of Asclepius.

Pharae is seventy stades distant from Abia the road is a salt spring The Emperor Augustus caused the Messenians of Pharae to be incorporated in Laconia. The founder Pharis is said to have been the son of Heimes and Phylodameia the daughter of Danaus He had no male children, but a daughter Telegone Homer, tracing her descendants in the Iliad,2 says that twins, Crethon and Oitilochus, were boin to Diocles, Diocles himself being the son of Ortilochus son of Alpheius He makes no reference to Telegone, who in the Messenian account bore Ortilochus to Alpheius I heard also at Phanae that besides the twins a daughter Anticleia was born to Diocles, and that her children were Nicomachus and Gorgasus, by Machaon the son of Asclepius They remained at Pharae and succeeded to the kingdom on the death of Diocles The power of healing diseases and curing the maimed has remained with them to this day, and in return for this, sacrifices and votive offerings are brought to then sanctuary The people of Pharae possess also a temple of Fortune (Tyche) and an ancient image Homer is the first whom I know to have mentioned Fortune in his poems. He did so in the Hymn to Demeter, where he enumerates the daughters of Ocean, telling how they played with Koie the daughter of Demeter, and making Fortune one of them. The lines are

"We all in a lovely meadow, Leucippe, Phaeno, Electre and Ianthe, Melobosis and Tyche and Ocyrhoe with face like a flower"

He said nothing further about this goddess being the mightiest of gods in human affairs and displaying greatest strength, as in the Iliad he represented Athena and Enyo as supreme in war, and Artemis feared in childbrith, and Aphrodite heeding the affairs of marriage? But he makes no other mention of Fortune Bupalos? a skilful temple-architect and carver of images, who made the statue of Fortune at Smyrna, was the first whom we know to have represented her with the heavenly sphere upon her head and carrying in one hand the horn of Amaltheia, as the Greeks call it, representing her functions to this extent. The poems of Pindar later contained references to Fortune, and it is he who called her Supporter of the City the road which leads thence into the interior of Messenia is the city of the Thunatae, which they say had the name Antheia in Homei's poems.1 Augustus gave Thuria into the possession of the Lacedaemonians of Sparta For when Augustus was emperor of the Romans, Antony, himself a Roman, made war upon him and was joined by the Messenians and the jest of the Greeks, because the Lacedaemonians were on the side of Augustus this reason Augustus punished the Messenians and the rest of his adversaries, some more, some less The people of Thuna left their town, which lay originally on high ground, and came down to live in the plain. Nevertheless the upper town is not entuely deserted, but there are remains of the wall and a temple there, called the temple of the Syrian Goddess A liver called Alis flows past the town in the plain

In the interior is a village Calamae and a place Limnae, where is a sanctuary of Artemis Limnatis (Of the lake) They say that Teleclus king of Sparta met his end here—On the road from Thuria towards Arcadia are the springs of the Pamisus, at which little children find cures

A road turns to the left from the springs, and after some forty stades is the city of the Messenians under Ithome It is enclosed not only by Mount Ithome, but on the side towards the Pamisos by Mount Eva. The mountain is said to have obtained its name from

The cult came to be established among them in the following way. Among the people of Calydon, Artemis, who was worshipped by them above all the gods, had the title Laphria, and the Messenians who received Naupactus from the Athenians, being at that time close neighbours of the Aetolians, adopted her from the people of Calydon I will describe her appearance in another place.2 name Laphria spread only to the Messenians and to the Achaeans of Patiae But all cities worship Artemis of Ephesus, and individuals hold her in honour above all the gods. The reason, in my view, is the ienown of the Amazons, who traditionally dedicated the image, also the extreme antiquity of this sanctuary. Three other points as well have contributed to her ienown, the size of the temple, surpassing all buildings among men, the eminence of the city of the Ephesians and the renown of the goddess who dwells there

The Messenians have a temple elected to Eileithvia with a stone statue, and near by a hall of the Curetes, where they make burnt offerings of every kind of living creature, thrusting into the flames not only cattle and goats, but finally birds as well There is a holy shrine of Demeter at Messene and statues of the Dioscuii, carrying the daughters of Leucippus I have already explained in an earlier passage 1 that the Messenians argue that the sons of Tyndaneus belong to them rather than to the Lace-The most numerous statues and the most worth seeing are to be found in the sanctuary of Asclepius Foi besides statues of the god and his sons, and besides statues of Apollo, the Muses and Heracles, the city of Thebes is represented and Epaminondas the son of Cleommis, Fortune, and Aitemis Bringer of Light. The stone statues are the work of Damophon (I know of no other Messenian sculptor of ment apart from him), the statue of Epaminondas is of iron and the work of some other There is also a temple of Messene the artist gained influence through his wealth and is honoured by the Messenians as a hero. There are certain Messenians, who, while admitting that Aethidas was a man of great wealth, maintain that it is not he who is represented on the relief but an ancestor and namesake. The elder Aethidas was their leader, when Demetrius the son of Philip and his force surprised them in the night and succeeded in penetrating into the town unnoticed.

There is also the tomb of Aristomenes here They say that it is not a cenotaph, but when I asked whence and in what manner they recovered the bones of Austomenes, they said that they sent to Rhodes for them, and that it was the god of Delphi who ordered They also instructed me in the nature of the rites carried out at the tomb. The bull which is to be offered to the dead man is brought to the tomb and bound to the pillar which stands upon the grave Being fierce and unused to bonds he will not stand, and if the pillar is moved by his struggles and bounds, it is a good omen to the Messenians, but if the pillar is not moved the sign portends misfortune They have it that Aristomenes was present at the battle of Leuctia, though no longer among men, and say that he helped the Thebans and was the chief cause of the Lacedaemonian disaster. I know that the Chaldaeans and Indian sages were the first to say that the soul of man is immortal, and have been followed by some of the Greeks, particularly by Plato the son of Ariston If all are willing to accept this, this too cannot be demed, that his hatred for the Lacedaemonians was imparted to Aristomenes for all time. What I myself heard in Thebes gives probability to the Messenian account, although it does not coincide in all respects. The Thebans say that when the battle of Leuctra was imminent, they sent to other oracles and to enquire of the god of Lebadera. The replies of the Ismenian and Ptoan Apollo are recorded, also the responses given at Abae and at Delphi. Trophonius, they say, answered in hexameters.—

"Or ever ye join battle with the foe, set up a trophy and deck it with my shield, which impetuous Aistomenes the Messenian placed in my temple—And I will destroy the host of foemen bearing shield"

When the oracle was brought, they say that Epaminondas urged Xenocrates, who sent for the shield of Aristomenes and used it to adorn a trophy in a spot where it could be seen by the Lacedae-monians. Those of them who had seen the shield at Lebadeia in peace-time knew it, and all knew it by repute. After their victory the Thebans restored the offering to Trophonius. There is also a bronze statue of Aristomenes in the Messenian running-ground. Not far from the theatre is a sanctuary of Sarapis and Isis.

which is the Messeman acropolis, is a spring Clepsydra It is a hopeless task, however zealously undertaken, to enumerate all the peoples who claim that Zeus was born and brought up among them The Messenians have their share in the story: for they too say that the god was brought up among them and that his nurses were Ithome and Neda, the liver having received its name from the latter, while the former, Ithome, gave her name to the mountain. These nymphs are said to have bathed Zeus here, after he was stolen by the Curetes owing to the danger that threatened from his father, and it is said that it has its name from the Curetes' Water is carried every day from the spring to the sanctuary of Zeus of Ithome. The statue of Zeus is the work of Ageladas 1 and was made originally for the Messenian settlers in Naupactus. The pilest is chosen annually and keeps the image in his house 2 They keep an annual festival, the Ithomaea, and originally a musical contest was held. This can be gathered from the epic lines of Eumelus Eumelus, in his processional and other sources hymn to Delos, says

"For dear to the God of Ithome was the Muse, whose < lute> 15 pure and free her sandals."

I think that he wrote the lines because he knew that they held a musical contest,

At the Arcadian gate leading to Megalopolis is a Herm of Attic style, for the square form of Herm is Athenian, and the rest adopted it thence. After a descent of thirty stades from the gate is the watercourse of Balyra. The river is said to have got its name from Thampirs throwing (ballem) his lyre away here after his blinding. He was the son of Philammon and the nymph Argiope, who once dwelt on Parnassus, but settled among the Odrysae when pregnant, for Philammon refused to take her into his house. Thampirs is called an Odrysian and Thracian on these grounds. The watercourses Leucasia and Amphitos unite to form one stream.

When these are crossed, there is a plain called the plain of Stenyclerus. Stenyclerus was a hero, it is said. Facing the plain is a site anciently called Oechalia, in our time the Carnasian grove, thickly grown with cypresses. There are statues of the gods Apollo Carneius and Hagne, also Hermes carrying a ram. Hagne (the holy one) is a title of Kore the daughter of Demeter. Water rises from a spring close to the statue. I may not reveal the rites of the Great Goddesses, for it is their mysteries which they celebrate in the Carnasian grove, and I regard them as second only to the Eleusinian in sanctity. But my dream did not prevent me from making known to all that the brazen urn, discovered by the Argive general, and the bones of Eurytus the son of Melaneus were kept here. A river Chaiadrus flows past the grove, about eight stades along the road to the left are the runs of Andania The guides agree that the city got its name from a woman Andania, but I can say nothing as to her parents or her husband. On the road from Andania towards Cypanissiae is Polichne, as it is called, and the streams of Electra and Coeus. The names perhaps are to be connected with Electra the daughter of Atlas and Coeus the father of Leto, or Electra and Coeus may be two local heroes.

When the Electia is crossed, there is a spring called Achaia, and the iuins of a city Dorium Homei states that the misfoitune of Thamylis took place here in Dorium, because he said that he would overcome the Muses themselves in song But Prodicus of Phocaea, if the epic called the Minyad is indeed his, says that Thamylis paid the penalty in Hades for his boast against the Muses My view is that Thamylis lost his eyesight through disease, as happened later to Homer Homer, however, continued making poetry all his life without giving way to his misfoitune, while Thamylis forsook his ait through stress of the trouble that afflicted him up the Rhine and Maeandei The chief run of fish is up the stream of the Achelous, which discharges opposite the Echinades islands. But the fish that enter the Pamisus are of quite a different kind, as the water is pure and not muddy like the rivers which I have mentioned The giev mullet, a fish that loves mud, frequents the more turbid streams The rivers of Greece contain no creatures dangerous to men as do the Indus and the Egyptian Nile, or again the Rhine and Danube, the Euphrates and These indeed produce man-eating creatures of the worst, in shape resembling the cat-fish of the Hermus and Maeander, but of darker colour and stronger. In these respects the cat-fish is inferior The Indus and Nile both contain crocodiles, and the Nile liver-horses as well, as dangerous to man as the crocodile But the rivers of Greece contain no terrors from wild beasts, for the sharks of the Aous, which flows through Thesprotia, are not river beasts but migiants from the sea

Corone is a city to the right of the Pamisus, on the sea-coast under Mount Mathia. On this road is a place on the coast regarded as sacred to Ino For they say that she came up from the sea at this point, after her divinity had been accepted and her name changed from Ino to Leucothea. A short distance further the river Bias reaches the sea. The name is said to be derived from Bias the son of Twenty stades off the road is the foun-Amythaon tain of Plataniston, the water of which flows out of a broad plane tree, which is hollow inside. The breadth of the tree gives the impression of a small cave; from it the drinking water flows to Corone. The old name of Corone was Aepera, but when the Messenians were restored to Peloponnese by the Thebans, it is said that Epimelides, who was sent as founder, named it Coroneia after his native town in Boeotia The Messenians got the name wrong from the start, and the mistake which they made gradually prevailed in course of time. story is told to the effect that, when digging the foundations of the city wall, they came upon a bronze crow, in Greek corone The gods who have temples here are Artemis, called the "Nurse of Children." Dionysus and Asclepius The statues of Asclepius and Dionysus are of stone, but there is a statue of Zeus the Saviour in the market-place made The statue of Athena also on the of bionze acropolis is of bronze, and stands in the open air, holding a crow in her hand I also saw the tomb of Epimelides I do not know why they call the harbour "the harbour of the Achaeans"

Some eighty stades beyond Corone is a sanctuary of Apollo on the coast, venerated because it is very ancient according to Messenian tradition, and the god cures illnesses. They call him Apollo Corynthus His image is of wood, but the statue of Apollo Argeotas, said to have been dedicated by the Argonauts, is of bronze. The city of Corone is adjoined by Colonides. The inhabitants say that they are not Messenians but settlers from Attica brought by Colaenus, who followed a bird known as the crested lark to found the settlement in accordance with an oracle. They were, however, in the course of time to adopt the dialect and customs of the Dorians. The town of Colonides has on high ground, a short distance from the sea.

The people of Asine originally adjoined the Lycoritae on Painassus. Their name, which they maintained after their arrival in Peloponnese, was Dryopes, from their founder. Two generations after Dryops, in the reign of Phylas, the Dryopes were conquered in battle by Heracles and brought as an offering to Apollo at Delphi When brought to Peloponnese according to the god's instructions to Heiacles, they first occupied Asine by Hermion They were driven thence by the Argives and lived in Messenia was the gift of the Lacedaemonians, and when in the course of time the Messenians were restored, they were not driven from their city by the Messenians But the people of Asine give this account of themselves They admit that they were conquered by Heracles and their city in Parnassus captured, but they deny that they were made prisoners and brought to Apollo But when the walls were carried by Heracles, they deserted the town and fled to the heights of Parnassus, and afterwards crossed the sea to Peloponnese and appealed to Eurystheus. Being at feud with Heracles, he gave them Asine in the Aigolid The men of Asine are the only members of the race of the Divopes to pilde themselves on the name to this day. The case is very different with the Euboeans of Styla They too are Dryopes in origin, who took no part in the battle with Heracles, as they dwelt at some distance from the city. Yet the people of Styra disdain the name of Dryopes, just as the Delphians have refused to be called Phocians But the men of Asine take the greatest pleasure in being called Divopes, and clearly have made the most holy of their sanctuaries in memory of those which they once had, established on Parnassus For they have both a temple of Apollo and again a temple and ancient statue of Divops, whose mysteries they celebrate every year, saying that he is the son of Apollo. The town itself lies on the coast just as the old Asine in Argive territory It is a journey of forty stades from Colonides to Asine, and of an equal number from Asine to the promontory called Acritas Acritas projects into the sea and has a descrited island, Theganussa, lying off it After Acutas is the harbour Phoenicus and the Oenussae islands lying opposite XXXV Before the mustering of the aimy for the Trojan war, and during the war, Mothone was called Pedasus Later, as the people themselves say, it received a new name from the daughter of Oeneus They say that Mothone was born of a concubine to Oeneus the son of Porthaon, when he had taken refuge with Diomede in Peloponnese after the fall of Troy But in my view it was the rock Mothon that gave the place its name. It is this which forms their harbour For projecting under water, it makes the entiance for ships more narrow and also serves as a breakwater against a heavy swell I have shown in earlier passages 1 that, when the Nauplians in the reign of Damociatidas in Argos were expelled for their Laconian sympathies, the Lacedaemonians gave them Mothone, and that no change was made regarding them on the part of the Messenians when they returned The Nauplians in my view were Egyptians originally, who came by sea with Danaus to the Argolid, and two generations later were settled in Nauplia by Nauplius the son of Amymone. The Emperor Tiajan granted civic freedom and autonomy to the people of Mothone. In earlier days they were the only people of Messenia on the coast to suffer a disaster like the following Thesprotian Epilus was ruined by anarchy For Deidameia the daughter of Pyrrhus, being without children, handed over the government to the people when she was on the point of death She was the daughter of Pyrrhus, son of Ptolemy, son of Alexander, son of Pyirhus. I have told the facts relating to Pyrrhus the son of Aeacides in my account of the Athenians 2 Procles the Carthaginian 3 indeed rated Alexander the son of Philip higher on account of his good fortune and for the brilliance of his achievements, but said that Pyirhus was the better man in infantry and cavalry tactics and in the invention of stratagems of war. When the Epnots were rid of their kings, the people threw off all control and disdained to listen to their magistrates, and the Illyrians who live on the Ionian sea above Epirus reduced them by a raid We have yet to hear of a democracy bringing prosperity to a nation other than the Athenians, the Athenians attained to greatness by its means, for they surpassed the Greek world in native wit, and least disregarded the established laws Now the Illyrians, having tasted empire and being always desirous of more. built ships, and plundering others whom they fell in with, put in to the coast of Mothone and anchored as in a friendly poit. Sending a messenger to the city they asked for wine to be brought to their ships A few men came with it and they bought the wine at the price which the inhabitants asked, and themselves sold a part of then cargo When on the following day a larger number arrived from the town, they allowed them also to make their profit Finally women and men came down to the ships to sell wine and trade with the barbarians Thereupon by a bold stroke the Illyrians carried off a number of men and still more of the women Canving them on board ship, they set sail for the Ionian sea. having desolated the city of the Mothonaeans.

In Mothone is a temple of Athena Of the Winds, with a statue dedicated, it is said, by Diomede, who gave the goddess her name. The country being damaged by violent and unseasonable blasts, Diomede played to the goddess, and henceforward no disaster caused by the winds has visited their country. There is also a shrine of Artemis here and water in a well mixed with pitch, in appearance very like the iris-oil of Cyzicos. Water can assume every colour and scent. The bluest that I know from personal experience is that at Thermonylae, not all of it but that which flows into the swimming-baths, called locall vthe Flomen's Pots Red water, in colour like blood, is found in the land of the Hebrews near the city of Joppa The water is close to the sea, and the account which the natives give of the sping is that Perseus, after destroying the sea-monster, to which the daughter of Cepheus was exposed, was hed off the blood in the spring. I have myself seen water coming up black from springs at Astyra Astyra opposite Lesbos is the name of the hot baths in the district called Ataineus. It was this Atarneus, which the Chians received as a reward from the Peisians as a reward for surrendering the suppliant, Pactias the Lydian.1 This water then has a black colo un: butthe Romans have a white water, above the city across the river called Anio When a man enters it, he is at first attacked with cold and shive in g. but after a little time it waims him like the hottest dia g All these springs that had something wonderful to show I have seen myself For I pass over the less wonderful that I know, and it is no great mar vel to find water that is salt and haish But there are two other The water in the White Plain, as it is called, kınds in Caria, by the village with the name Dascylou Come, is warm and sweeter than milk to diink. I know that Herodotus says that a spring of bitter water flows into the river Hypanis, We can assuredly admit the truth of his statement, when in which its water passed

XXXVI It is a journey of about a hundred stades from Mothone to the promontory of Coryphasium, on which Pylos lies This was founded by Pylos the son of Cleson bringing from the Megarid the Leleges who then occupied the country But he did not enjoy it, as he was driven out by Neleus and the Pelasgians of Iolcos, on which he departed to the adjoining country and there occupied the Pylos in Elis When Neleus became king, he raised Pylos to such renown that Homer in his epics calls it the city of Neleus 1 It contains a sanctuary of Athena with the fitle Coryphasia, and a house called the house of Nestor, in which there is a painting of him His tomb is inside the city, the tomb at a little distance from Pylos is said to be the tomb of Thiasymedes There is a cave inside the town, in which it is said that the cattle belonging to Nestor and to Neleus before him were kept. These cattle must have been of Thessalian stock, having once belonged to Iphiclus the father of Protesilaus Neleus demanded these cattle as bride gifts for his daughter from her suitors, and it was on their account that Melampus went to Thessalv to gratify his brother Bias He was put in bonds by the heidsmen of Iphiclus, but received them as his reward for the prophecies which he gave to Iphiclus at his request So it seems the men of those days made it then business to amass wealth of this kind, heids of horses and cattle, if it is the case that Nestor desired to get possession of the cattle of Iphiclus and that Eurystheus, in view of the reputation of the Iberian cattle, ordered Heracles to drive off the herd of Gervones Eivx too, who was leigning then in Sicily. plainly had so violent a desire for the cattle from Erytheia that he wiestled with Heracles, staking his kingdom on the match against these cattle Homer says in the Iliad,1 a hundred kine were the first of the bride gifts paid by Iphidamas the son of Antenor to his biide's father. This confirms my argument that the men of those days took the greatest pleasure in cattle. But the cattle of Neleus were pastured for the most part across the boider. For the country of the Pylians in general is sandy and unable to provide so much grazing Homer testifies to this, when he mentions Nestor, always adding that he was king of sandy Pylos

The island of Sphacteria lies in front of the harbour just as Rheneia off the anchorage at Delos. It seems that places litherto unknown have been raised to fame by the fortunes of men. For Caphereus in Euboea is famous since the storm that here befell the Greeks with Agamemnon on their voyage from Troy Psyttaleia by Salamis we know from the destruction of the Persians there. In like manner the Lacedaemonian reverse made Sphacteria known to all mankind. The Athenians dedicated a bronze statue of Victory also on the acropolis as a memorial of the events at Sphacteria.

When Cyparissiae is leached from Pylos, there is a spring below the city near the sea, the water of which they say gushed forth for Dionysus when he struck the ground with a thyisus. For this reason they call the spring Dionysias. There is a shrine of Apollo in Cyparissiae and of Athena with the title Cyparissia. In the depression called Aulon there is a temple and statue of Asclepius Aulonius. Here flows the liver Neda, forming the boundary between Messenia and Elis.

father of Endymion. The Moon, they say, fell in love with this Endymion and bore him fifty daughters Others with greater probability say that Endymion took a wife Asterodia-others say she was Cromia, the daughter of Itonus, the son of Amphictyon, others again, Hyperippe, the daughter of Arcasbut all agree that Endymion begat Paeon, Eperus, Aetolus, and also a daughter Eurycyda. Endymion set his sons to run a race at Olympia for the throne, Epeius won, and obtained the kingdom, and his subjects were then named Epeans for the first time Of his brothers they say that Aetolus remained at home, while Paeon, vexed at his defeat, went into the farthest exile possible, and that the region beyond the liver Axius was named after him Paeonia. to the death of Endymion, the people of Heracleia near Miletus do not agree with the Eleans, for while the Eleans show a tomb of Endymion, the folk of Heracleia say that he retired to Mount Latmus and give him honour, there being a shine of Endymion on Latmus Epeius mairied Anaxiioe, the daughter of Coronus, and begat a daughter Hyrmina, but no male issue In the reign of Epeius the following events also occurred Oenomaus was the son of Alvion (though poets proclaimed his father to be Ares, and the common report agrees with them), but while loid of the land of Pisa he was put down by Pelops the Lydian, who crossed over from Asia the death of Oenomaus, Pelops took possession of the land of Pisa and its bordering country Olympia, separating it from the land of Eperus. The Eleans said that Pelops was the first to found a temple of Heimes in Peloponnesus and to sacrifice to the god, his purpose being to avert the wrath of the god for the death of Myritius Aetolus, who came to the throne after Epeius, was made to flee from Peloponnesus, because the children of Apis tried and convicted him of unintentional homicide. For Apis, the son of Jason, from Pallantium in Arcadia, was run over and killed by the chariot of Aetolus at the games held in honour of Azan. Aetolus, son of Endymion, gave to the dwellers around the Achelous their name, when he fled to this part of the mainland. But the kingdom of the Epeans fell to Eleius, the son of Eurycyda, daughter of Endymion and, believe the tale who will, of Poseidon. It was Eleius who gave the inhabitants their present name of Eleans in place of Epeans.

Eleius had a son Augeas. Those who exaggerate his glory give a turn to the name "Eleius" and make Helius to be the father of Augeas. This Augeas had so many cattle and flocks of goats that actually most of his land remained untilled because of the dung of the animals. Now he persuaded Heracles to cleanse for him the land from dung, either in return for a part of Elis or possibly for some other reward. Heracles accomplished this feat too, turning aside the stream of the Menius into the dung. But, because Heracles had accomplished his task by cunning, without toil, Augeas refused to give him his reward, and banished Phyleus, the elder of his two sons, for objecting that he was wronging a man who had been his benefactor. He made preparations himself to resist Heracles, should he attack Elis; more particularly he made friends with the sons of Actor and with Amarynceus Amarynceus, besides being a good soldier, had a father, Pyttius, of Thessalian descent, who came from Thessaly to Elis. To Amarynceus, therefore, Augeas also gave a share in the government of Elis, Actor and his sons had a share in the kingdom and were natives of the country. For the father of Actor was Phorbas, son of Lapithus, and his mother was Hyrmina, daughter of Epeius. Actor named after her the city of Hyrmina, which he founded in Elis.

II Heracles accomplished no brilliant feat in the war with Augeas For the sons of Actor were in the prime of courageous manhood, and always put to flight the allies under Heracles, until the Counthians proclaimed the Isthmian truce, and the sons of Actor came as envoys to the meeting Heracles set an ambush for them at Cleonae and muidered them. As the muiderer was unknown, Moline devoted heiself to detecting him When she discovered him, the Eleans demanded satisfaction for the crime from the Argives, for at the time Heracles had his home at Tilyns When the Argives refused them satisfaction, the Eleans as an alternative pressed the Counthians entirely to exclude the Argive people from the Isthmian games When they failed in this also, Moline is said to have laid cuises on her countrymen, should they refuse to boycott the Isthman festival The curses of Moline are respected right down to the present day, and no athlete of Elis is wont to compete in the Isihmian games There are two other accounts, differing from the one that I have given. According to one of them Cypselus, the tyrant of Corinth, dedicated to Zeus a golden image at Olympia Cypselus died before inscribing his own name on the offering, the Counthians asked of the Eleans leave to inscribe the name of Corinth on it, but were refused Wroth with the Eleans, they proclaimed that they must keep away from the Isthman games But how could the Counthians themselves take part in the Olympic games if the Eleans against their will were shut out by the Counthians from the Isthmian games? The other account is this Piolaus. a distinguished Elean, had two sons, Philanthus and Lampus, by his wife Lysippe These two came to the Isthmian games 1 to compete in the boys' pancratium, and one of them intended to wrestle Before they entered the ring they were strangled or done to death in some other way by their fellow competitors Hence the curses of Lysippe on the Eleans, should they not voluntarily keep away from the Isthmian games But this story too proves on examination to be silly For Timon, a man of Elis, won victories in the pentathlum at the Greek games, and at Olympia there is even a statue of him, with an elegiac inscription giving the clowns he won and

If the proposed emendation be adopted the meaning will be "one to compete in the boys' pancratium, the other in wiestling"

About the baleful death of the Molionids

III Enough of my discussion of this question Heracles afterwards took Elis and sacked it, with an army he had raised of Argives, Thebans and Arcadians The Eleans were aided by the men of Pisa and of Pylus in Elis The men of Pylus were punished by Heracles, but his expedition against Pisa was stopped by an oracle from Delphi to this effect —

My father cares for Pisa, but to me in the hollows of Pytho ¹

This oracle proved the salvation of Pisa—To Phyleus Heracles gave up the land of Elis and all the rest, more out of respect for Phyleus than because he wanted to do so. he allowed him to keep the prisoners, and Augeas to escape punishment—The women of Elis, it is said, seeing that their land had been deprived of its vigorous manhood, prayed to Athena that they might conceive at their first union with their husbands—Their prayer was answered, and they set up a sanctuary of Athena surnamed Mother—Both wives and husbands were so delighted at their union that they named the place itself, where they first met, Bady (sweet), and the river that runs thereby Bady Water, this being a word of their native dialect

When Phyleus had returned to Dulichium after organising the affairs of Elis, Augeas died at an advanced age, and the kingdom of Elis devolved on Agasthenes, the son of Augeas, and on Amphimachus and Thalpius. For the sons of Actor married twin sisters, the daughters of Devamenus who was king at Olenus; Amphimachus was boin to one son and Theronice Thalpius to her sister Theraephone and Eurytus However, neither Amarynceus himself nor his son Diores remained common people. cidentally this is shown by Homei 1 in his list of the Eleans, he makes then whole fleet to consist of forty ships, half of them under the command of Amphimachus and Thalpius, and of the remaining twenty he puts ten under Diores, the son of Amarynceus, and ten under Polyxenus, the son of Agasthenes Polyxenus came back safe from Troy and begat a son, Amphimachus This name I think Polyxenus gave his son because of his friendship with Amphimachus, the son of Cteatus, who died at Troy. Amphimachus begat Eleius, and it was while Eleius was king in Elis that the assembly of the Dorian aimy under the sons of Aiistomachus took place, with a view to returning to the Pelopon-To then kings was delivered this oracle, that they were to choose the "one with three eves" to lead them on their return When they were at a loss as to the meaning of the oracle, they were met by a man driving a mule, which was blind of one eye Cresphontes infeired that this was the man indicated by the oracle, and so the Donans made him one of themselves He uiged them to descend upon the Peloponnesus in ships, and not to attempt to go across the Isthmus with a land aimy Such was his advice, and at the same time he led them on the voyage from Naupactus to Molverium. In return they agreed to give him at his request the land of Elis The man was Oxvlus, son of Haemon, the son of Thoas This was the Thoas who helped the sons of Atreus to destroy the empire of Priam, and from Thoas to Aetolus the son of Endymion are six generations There were ties of kindred between the Heracleidae and the kings of Actolia, in particular the mothers of Thoas, the son of Andiaemon, and of Hyllus, the son of Heracles, were sisters It fell to the lot of Oxvlus to be an outlaw from Aetolia The story goes that as he was throwing the quoit he missed the mark and committed unintentional homicide. The man killed by the quoit, according to one account, was Thermius, the brother of Oxylus, according to another it was Alcidocus, the son of Scopius

IV The following story is also told of Oxylus He suspected that, when the sons of Aristomachus saw that the land of Elis was a goodly one, and cultivated throughout, they would be no longer willing to give it to him. He accordingly led the Dorians through Arcadia and not through Elis Oxylus was anxious to get the kingdom of Elis without a battle, but Dius would not give way, he proposed that, instead of their fighting a pitched battle with all their forces, a single soldier should be chosen from each aimy to fight as its champion. This proposal chanced to find favour with both sides, and the champions chosen were the Elean Degmenus, an archer, and Pyraechmes, a slinger, to represent the Aetolians Pyraechmes won and Oxylus got the kingdom. He allowed the old inhabitants, the Epeans, to keep their possessions, except that he introduced among them Aetolian colonists, giving them a share in the land assigned privileges to Dius, and kept up after the ancient manner the honours paid to heroes, especially the worship of Augeas, to whom even at the present day hero-sacrifice is offered He is also said to have induced to come into the city the dwellers in the villages near the wall, and by increasing the number of the inhabitants to have made Elis larger and generally more prosperous There also came to him an oracle from Delphi, that he should bring in as co-founder "the descendant of Pelops" Oxylus made diligent search, and in his search he discovered Agonus, son of Damasius, son of Penthilus, son of Orestes He brought Agonus himself from Helice in Achaia, and with him a small body of Achaeans The wife of Oxylus they say was called Pieria, but beyond this nothing more about her is recorded Oxylus is said to have had two sons, Aetolus and Laras Aetolus died before his parents, who buried him in a tomb which they caused to be made right in the gate leading to Olympia and the sanctuary of Zeus That they buried him thus was due to an oracle forbidding the corpse to be laid either without the city or within it Right down to our own day the gymnasiarch sacrifices to Aetolus as to a hero every year

After Oxylus the kingdom devolved on Laias, son of Oxylus. His descendants, however, I find did not reign, and so I pass them by, though I know who they were; my narrative must not descend to men of common tank Later on Iphitus, of the line of Oxylus and contemporary with Lycurgus, who drew up the code of laws for the Lacedaemonians, airanged the games at Olympia and re-established afresh the Olympic festival and truce, after an interruption of uncertain length The reason for this interruption I will set forth when my narrative deals with Olympia 1 At this time Greece was givenously worn by internal strife and plague, and it occurred to Iphitus to ask the god at Delphi for deliverance from these evils. The story goes that the Pythian puestess ordained that Iphitus himself and the Eleans must renew the Olympic games also induced the Eleans to sacrifice to Heracles as to a god, whom hitherto they had looked upon as their enemy The inscription at Olympia calls Iphitus the son of Haemon, but most of the Greeks say that his father was Prayonides and not Haemon, while the ancient records of Elis traced him to a father of the same name

The Eleans played then part in the Tiojan war, and also in the battles of the Persian invasion of Greece. I pass over their struggles with the Pisans and Arcadians for the management of the Olympian games. Against their will they joined the Lacedae-monians in their invasion of Athenian territory, and shortly afterwards they rose up with the Mantineans 420 mc and Argives against the Lacedaemonians, inducing

Athens too to join the alliance. When Agis invaded the land, and Xenias tuined traitor, the Eleans won a battle near Olympia, routed the Lacedaemonians and drove them out of the sacred enclosure, but shortly afterwards the war was conducted by the treaty I have already spoken of in my account of the Lacedaemonians 1. When Philip the son of Amyntas would not let Greece alone, the Eleans, weakened by civil strife, joined the Macedonian alliance, but they could not bring themselves to fight against the Greeks at Chaeroneia. They joined Philip's attack on the Lacedaemonians because of their old hatred of that people, but on the death of Alexander they fought on the side of the Greeks against Antipater and the Macedonians

V Later on Anstotimus, the son of Damaretus, the son of Etymon, became despot of Elis, being aided in his attempt by Antigonus, the son of Demetrius, who was king in Macedonia. After a despotism of six months Alistotimus was deposed, a rising against him having been organised by Chilon, Hellanicus, Lampis and Cylon, Cylon it was who with his own hand killed the despot when he had sought sanctuary at the altar of Zeus the Saviour

Such were the wars of the Eleans, of which my present enumeration must serve as a summary. The land of Elis contains two marvels. Here, and here only in Greece, does fine flax grow, and secondly, only over the border, and not within it, can the mares

As you go from Elis there is a district stretching down to the sea. It is called Samicum and above it on the right is what is called Triphylia, in which is the city Lepreus The citizens of this city wish to belong to the Arcadians, but it is plain that from the beginning they have been subject to the Eleans Such of them as have won Olympic victories have been announced by the herald as Eleans from Lepieus, and Austophanes in a comedy calls Lepreus a town of the Eleans Leaving the liver Anigius on the left there is a road leading to Lepreus from Samicum, another leads to it from Olympia and a third from Elis The longest of them is a day's journey The city got its name, they say, from its founder Lepieus the son of Pyrgeus There was also a story that Lepreus contended with Heracles that he was as good a tiencheiman. Each killed an ox at the same time and prepared it for the table. It turned out, even as Lepieus maintained, that he was as powerful a trencherman as Heracles Afterwards he made hold to challenge him to a duel Lepieus, they say, lost, was killed, and was buried in the land of Phigaleia. The Phigalians, however, could not show a tomb of Lepieus I have heard some who maintained that Lepreus was founded by Lepiea, the daughter of Pyrgeus Others say that the first 1 Buds, 149, dwellers in the land were afflicted with the disease leprosy, and that the city received its name from the misfortune of the inhabitants. The Lepreans told me that in their city once was a temple of Zeus Leucaeus (Of the White Poplar), the grave of Lycurgus, son of Aleus, and the grave of Caucon, over which was the figure of a man holding a lyre. But as far as I could see they had no tomb of distinction, and no sanctuary of any derty save one of Demeter. Even this was built of unburnt brick, and contained no image. Not far from the city of the Lepreans is a spring called Arene, and they say that it derives its name from the wife of Aphareus.

Returning again to Samicum, and passing through the district, we reach the mouth of the Anigrus The current of this river is often held back by violent gales, which carry the sand from the open sea against it and stop the onward flow of the water So whenever the sand has become soaked on both sides, by the sea without and by the river within, beasts and still more travellers on foot are in danger of sinking The Anglus descends from the mountain Lapithus in Aicadia, and right from its source its water does not smell sweet but actually stinks hornbly Before it receives the tributary Acidas it plainly cannot support fish-life at all After the rivers unite, the fish that come down into the Anigius with the water are uneatable, though before, if they are caught in the Acidas, they are eatable I heard from an Ephesian that the Acidas was called Iardanus in ancient times I repeat his statement, though I have nowhere found evidence in support of it I am convinced that the peculiar odour of the Anigius is due to the earth through which the water springs up, just as those rivers beyond Ionia, the exhalation from which is deadly to man, owe then peculiarity to the same cause Some Greeks say that Chiron, others that Pylenor, another Centaur, when shot by Heracles fled wounded to this liver and washed his huit in it, and that it was the hydra's poison which gave the Anigrus its nasty smell Others again attribute the quality of the liver to Melampus the son of Amythaon, who threw into it the means he used to purify the daughters of Proetus

There is in Samicum a cave not far from the river, and called the Cave of the Anigrid Nymphs Whoever enters it suffering from alphos or leuke¹ first has to pray to the nymphs and to promise some sacrifice or other, after which he wipes the unhealthy parts of his body. Then, swimming through the river, he leaves his old uncleanness in its water, coming up sound and of one colour

Aetohan used as a fortified post against the Arcadians

As to the rums of Aiene, no Messeman and no Elean could point them out to me with certainty Those who care to do so may make all sorts of different guesses about it, but the most plausible account seemed to me that of those who held that in the heroic age and even earlier Samicum was called Arene. These quoted too the words of the Iliad—1

There is a river Minyerus flowing into the sea Near Arene

These runs are very near to the Anigrus, and, although it might be questioned whether Samicum was called Arene, yet the Arcadians are agreed that of old the Anigrus was called the Minyerus. One might well hold that the Neda near the sea was made the boundary between Elis and Messenia at the time of the return of the Heracleidae to the Peloponnesus

After the Amgrus, if you travel for a considerable distance through a district that is generally sandy and grows wild pines, you will see behind you on the left the ruins of Scillus. It was one of the cities of Triphylia, but in the war between Pisa and Elis the citizens of Scillus openly helped Pisa against her enemy, and for this reason the Eleans utterly destroyed it. The Lacedaemonians after wards separated Scillus from Elis and gave it to Xenophon, the son of Givlus, when he had been exiled from Athens. The reason for his banishment was that he had taken part in an expedition which Cyrus, the greatest 401 D c enemy of the Athenian people, had organised against their friend, the Persian king Cyrus in fact, with his seat at Saidis, had been providing Lysander, the son of Austocutus, and the Lacedaemonians with money for then fleet Xenophon, accordingly, was banished, and having made Scillus his home he built in honour of Ephesian Aitemis a temple with a sanctuary and a sacred enclosure Scillus is also a hunting-ground for wild boars and deer, and the land is crossed by a river called the Selinus. guides of Elis said that the Eleans recovered Scillus again, and that Xenophon was tried by the Olympic Council for accepting the land from the Lacedaemonians, and, obtaining paidon from the Eleans, dwelt securely in Scillus Moreover, at a little distance from the sanctuary was shown a tomb, and upon the grave is a statue of maible from the Pentelic quarry The neighbours say that it is the tomb of Xenophon.

As you go from Scillus along the road to Olympia, before you cross the Alpheius, there is a mountain with high, precipitous cliffs It is called Mount Typaeum It is a law of Elis to east down it any women who are caught present at the Olympic games, or even on the other side of the Alpheius, on the days prohibited to women However, they say that no woman has been caught, except Callipateira only, some, however, give the lady the name of Pherenice and not Callipateira She, being a widow, disguised herself exactly like a gymnastic trainer, and brought her son to compete at Olympia Persinodus, for so her son was called, was victorious, and Callipateira, as she was jumping over the enclosure in which they keep the trainers shut up, bared her person. So her sex was discovered, but they let her go unpunished out of respect for her father, her brothers and her son, all of whom had been victorious at Olympia. But a law was passed that for the future trainers should strip before entering the arena.

VII By the time you reach Olympia the Alpheius is a large and very pleasant river to see, being fed by several tributaries, including seven very important ones The Helisson joins the Alpheius passing through Megalopolis, the Brentheates comes out of the territory of that city, past Gortyna, where is a sanctuary of Asclepius, flows the Gortvinus, from Melaeneae, between the territories of Megalopolis and Heraea, comes the Buphagus, from the land of the Clitorians the Ladon, from Mount Erymanthus a stream with the same name as the mountain These come down into the Alpheius from Arcadia; the Cladeus comes from Elis to join it The source of the Alpheius itself is in Aicadia, and not in Elis There is another legend about the Alpheius say that there was a hunter called Alpheius, who fell in love with Arethusa, who was herself a huntress Arethusa, unwilling to many, crossed, they say, to the island opposite Syracuse called Ortvgia, and there turned from a woman to a spring Alpheius too was changed by his love into the river. This account of Alpheius to Ortygia. But that the Alpheius passes through the sea and mingles his waters with the spring at this place I cannot disbelieve, as I know that the god at Delphi confirms the story. For when he despatched Archias the Corinthian to found Syracuse he uttered this oracle.

An isle, Ortygia, lies on the misty ocean Over against Trinacria, where the mouth of Alpheius bubbles Mingling with the springs of broad Arethusa

For this leason, therefole, because the water of the Alpheius mingles with the Alethusa, I am convinced that the legend alose of the liver's love-affair Those Greeks of Egyptians who have gone up into Aethiopia beyond Syene as far as the Aethiopian city of Meloe all say that the Nile enters a lake, and passes through it as though it were dry land, and that after this it flows through lower Aethiopia into Egypt before coming down into the sea at Pharos. And in the land of the Hebrews, as I can myself bear witness, the liver Jordan passes through a lake called Tiberias, and then, entering another lake called the Dead Sea, it disappears in it. The Dead Sea has the opposite qualities to those of any other water. Living creatures float in it naturally without swimming; dying creatures sink to the bottom. Hence the lake is barren of fish; their danger stares them in the face, and they flee back to the water which is their native element. The peculiarity of the Alpheius is shared by a river of Ionia. The source of it is on Mount Mycale, and having gone through the intervening sea the river rises again opposite Branchidae at the harbour called Panormus.

These things then are as I have described them As for the Olympic games, the most learned antiquaries of Elis say that Cionus was the first king of heaven, and that in his honour a temple was built in Olympia by the men of that age, who were named the Golden Race When Zeus was born, Rhea entrusted the guardianship of her son to the Dactyls of Ida, who are the same as those called Curetes They came from Cretan Ida—Heracles, Paeonaeus, Epimedes, Iasius and Idas Heracles, being the eldest, matched his brothers, as a game, in a runningrace, and crowned the winner with a branch of wild olive, of which they had such a copious supply that they slept on heaps of its leaves while still green It is said to have been introduced into Greece by Heracles from the land of the Hyperboreans, men living beyond the home of the North Wind Olen the Lycian, in his hymn to Achaeia, was the first to say that from these Hyperboreans Achaeia came to Delos Then Melanopus of Cyme composed an ode to Opis and Hecaerge, declaing that these, even before Achaeia, came to Delos from the Hyper-And Austeas of Proconnesus-tor he too made mention of the Hyperboreans-may perhaps have learnt even more about them from the Issedones, to whom he says in his poem that he came Heracles of Ida, therefore, has the reputation of being the first to have held, on the occasion I mentioned, the games, and to have called them Olympic So he established the custom of holding them every fifth 1 year, because he and his brothers were five in number Now some say that Zeus wrestled here with Cronus himself for the throne, while others say that he held the games in honour of his victory over Cronus. The record of victors include Apollo, who outian Heimes and beat Ares at boxing It is for this reason, they say, that the Pythian flute-song is played while the competitors in the pentathlum are jumping, for the flute-song is sacred to Apollo, and Apollo won Olympic victories.

VIII Later on there came (they say) from Crete Clymenus, the son of Cardys, about fifty years after the flood came upon the Greeks in the time of Deucalion. He was descended from Heracles of Ida, he held the games at Olympia and set up an altar in honour of Heracles, his ancestor, and the other Curetes, giving to Heracles the surname of Parastates (Assistant). And Endymion, the son of Aethlius, deposed Clymenus, and set his sons a race in Olympia with the kingdom as the prize. And about a generation later than Endymion, Pelops held the games in honour of Olympian Zeus in a more splendid manner than any of his predecessors. When the sons of Pelops were scattered from Elis over all the rest of Peloponnesus, Amythaon, the son of Cretheus, and cousin of Endymion on his father's side (for they say that Aethlius too was the son of Aeolus, though supposed to be a son of Zeus), held the Olympian games, and after him Pelias and Neleus in common Augeas too held them, and likewise Heracles, the son of Amphitivon, after the conquest of Elis The victors clowned by Heracles include Iolaus, who won with the mares of Heracles So of old a competitor was permitted to compete with maies which were not his own Homer.1 at any rate, in the games held in honour of Patroclus, has told how Menelaus drove a pair, of which one was Aetha, a mare of Agamemnon, while the other was his own hoise Moieover, Iolaus used to be charioteer to Heracles So Iolans won the charrot-race, and Iasius, an Aicadian, the horse-iace, while of the sons of Tyndareus one won the foot-race and Polydeuces the boxing-match Of Heracles himself it is said that he won victories at wrestling and the pancratium.

After the reign of Oxylus, who also celebrated the games, the Olympic festival was discontinued until the reign of Iphitus. When Iphitus, as I have already related, renewed the games, men had by this time forgotten the ancient tradition, the memory of which revived bit by bit, and as it revived they made additions to the games This I can prove; for when the unbroken tradition of the Olympiads began, 776 BC there was first the foot-race, and Coroebus an Elean was victor There is no statue of Coroebus at Olympia, but his grave is on the boiders of Elis Afterwards, at the fourteenth Festival, the double foot-race was added Hypenus of Pisa won the prize of wild olive in the double race, and at the next Festival Acanthus of Lacedaemon won in the long course At the eighteenth Festival they remembered the pentathlum and wrestling Lampis won the first and Eurybatus the second, these also being Lacedaemonians. At the twenty-third Festival they restored the prizes for boxing, and the victor was Onomastus of Smyrna, which already was a part of Ionia At the twenty-fifth they recognised the race of full-grown horses, and Pagondas of Thebes was proclaimed "victor in the chariot-race." At the eighth Festival after this they admitted the panciatium for men and the horse-race race was won by Crausidas of Crannon, and Lygdamis of Syracuse overcame all who entered for the pancra-Lygdamis has his tomb near the quarries at Syracuse, and according to the Syracusans he was as big as Heracles of Thebes, though I cannot vouch for the statement The contests for boys have no authority in old tradition, but were established by the Eleans themselves because they approved of The puzes for running and wrestling open to boys were instituted at the thirty-seventh Festival, Hipposthenes of Lacedaemon won the prize for wrestling, and that for junning was won by Polyneices of Elis. At the forty-first Festival they introduced boxing for boys, and the winner out of those who entered for it was Philytas of Sybaiis race for men in armour was approved at the sixtyfifth Festival, to provide, I suppose, military training, the first winner of the race with shields was Damaretus of Heraea The race for two full-grown horses, called synons (chariot and pan), was instituted at the ninety-third Festival, and the winner was Evagoras of Ehs At the ninety-minth Festival they resolved to hold contests for chariots drawn by foals, and Sybariades of Lacedaemon won the garland with his chariot and foals. Afterwards they added races for chariots and pairs of foals, and for single foals with rider. It is said that the victors proclaimed were. for the charrot and pan, Belistiche, a woman from the seaboard of Macedonia; for the ridden race, Tlepolemus of Lycia Tlepolemus, they say, won at the hundred and thirty-first Festival, and Belistiche at the third before this At the hundred and fortyfifth Festival prizes were offered for boys in the panciatium, the victory falling to Phaedimus, an Aeolian from the city Tioas

IX. Certain contests, too, have been dropped at Olympia, the Eleans resolving to discontinue them The pentathlum for boys was instituted at the thirty-eighth Festival; but after Eutelidas of Lacedaemon had received the wild olive for it, the Eleans disapproved of boys entering for this competition. The races for mule-carts, and the trotting-race, were instituted respectively at the seventieth Festival and the seventy-first, but were both abolished by proclamation at the eighty-fourth When they were first instituted. Theisius of Thessalv won the race for mule-carts, while Pataecus an Achaean from Dyme. won the trotting-race The trotting-race was for maies, and in the last part of the course the riders jumped off and ran beside the maies, holding on to the bridle, just as at the present day those do who are called "mounters" The mounters, however, differ from the riders in the trotting-race by having different badges, and by 11ding horses instead of The cart-race was neither of venerable antiquity nor yet a graceful performance over, each cart was diawn by a pair of mules, not horses, and there is an ancient curse on the Eleans if this animal is even boin in Elis

The order of the games in our own day, which places the sacrifices to the god for the pentathlum and chariot-races second, and those for the other competitions first, was fixed at the seventy-seventh Festival. Previously the contests for men and for horses were held on the same day. But at the Festival I mentioned the panciatiasts prolonged their contests till night-fall, because they were not summoned to the areas soon enough. The cause of the delay was partly the chariot-race, but still more the pentathlum. Callias of Athens was champion of the panciatiasts on this occasion, but never afterwards was the panciatium to be interfered with by the pentathlum or the chariots.

The rules for the presidents of the games are not the same now as they were at the first institution of the festival Iphitus acted as sole president, as likewise did the descendants of Oxylus after Iphitus But at the fiftieth Festival two men, appointed by lot from all the Eleans, were entrusted with the management of the Olympic games, and for a long time after this the number of the presidents continued to be two But at the ninety-fifth Festival nine umpiles were appointed. To three of them were entrusted the chariot-races, another three were to supervise the pentathlum, the rest superintended the remaining contests At the second Festival after this the tenth umpne was added. At the hundred and third Festival, the Eleans having twelve tribes, one umpire was chosen from each But they were hard pressed in a war with the Arcadians and lost a portion of their territory, along with all the parishes included in the sui rendered district, and so the number of tribes was reduced to eight in the hundred and fourth Olympiad Thereupon were chosen umpires equal in number to the tribes At the hundred and eighth Festival they returned again to the number of ten umpires, which has continued unchanged down to the present day an ode composed for an Olympic victor. The temple and the image were made for Zeus from spoils, when the Pisa was crushed in war by the Eleans, and with Pisa such of the subject peoples as conspired together with her. The image itself was wrought by Pheidias, as is testified by an inscription written under the feet of Zeus.

Pheidias, son of Chaimides, an Athenian, made me

The temple is in the Donc style, and the outside has columns all around it. It is built of native stone. Its height up to the pediment is sixty-eight feet, its breadth is ninety five, its length two hundred and thirty. The architect was Libon, a native. The tiles are not of baked earth, but of Pentelic marble cut into the shape of tiles. The invention is said to be that of Byzes of Navos, who they say made the images in Navos on which is the inscription.—

To the offspring of Leto was I dedicated by Euergus,

A Naxian, son of Byzes, who first made tiles of stone

This Byzes lived about the time of Alyattes the 61/9-56/9 Lydian, when Astyages, the son of Cyanales, leigned by over the Medes At Olympia a gilt caldion stands on each end of the 100f, and a Victory, also gilt, is set in about the middle of the pediment. Under the image of Victory has been dedicated a golden shield, with Medusa the Gorgon in telief. The inscription on the shield declares who dedicated it and the reason why they did so. It runs thus:—

The temple has a golden shield; from Tanagia
The Lacedaemonians and then allies dedicated it, A gift taken from the Argives, Athenians and Iomans,

The tithe offered for victory in war

This battle I also mentioned in my history of Attica.1 when I described the tombs that are Athens. On the outside of the frieze that runs round the temple at Olympia, above the columns, are gilt shields one and twenty in number, an offering made by the Roman general Mummius when he had conquered the Achaeans in war, captured Counth, and driven out its Donan inhabitants. To come to the pediments in the front pediment there is, not yet begun, the chariot-race between Pelops and Oenomaus, and preparation for the actual race is being made by both. An image of Zeus has been carved in about the middle of the pediment, on the right of Zeus is Oenomaus with a helmet on his head, and by him Sterope his wife, who was one of the daughters of Atlas Myrtilus too, the chanoteer of Oenomaus, sits in front of the hoises, which are four in number After him are two men. They have no names, but they too must be under orders from Oenomaus to attend to the horses At the very edge lies Cladeus, the niver which, in other ways also, the Eleans honour most after the Alpheius On the left from Zeus are Pelops, Hippodameia, the charioteer of Pelops, horses, and two men, who are apparently grooms of Pelops Then the pediment narrows again, and in this part of it is represented the Alpheius The name of the charioteer of Pelops is, according to the account of the Tioezenians Sphaeius, but the guide at Olympia called him The sculptures in the front pediment are by the sculptures in the front pediment are by Paeonius, who came from Mende in Thrace, those in the back pediment are by Alcamenes,1 a contemporary of Pheidias, ranking next after him for skill as a sculptor What he carved on the pediment is the fight between the Lapithae and the Centaurs at the marriage of Peirithous In the centre of the pediment is Penithous 2 On one side of him is Eurytion, who has seized the wife of Peirithous, with Caeneus bringing help to Penithous and on the other side is Theseus defending himself against the Centaurs with an axe One Centaur has seized a maid, another a boy in the prime of youth Alcamenes, I think, caived this scene, because he had learned from Homer's 3 poem that Penithous was a son of Zeus, and because he knew that Theseus was a great grandson of Pelops

Most of the labours of Heracles are represented at Olympia. Above the doors of the temple is carved the hunting of the Arcadian boar, his exploit against Diomedes the Thracian, and that against Geryones at Erytheia, he is also about to receive the burden of Atlas, and he cleanses the land from dung for the Eleans. Above the doors of the near chamber he is taking the guidle from the Amazon, and there are the affans of the deer, of the bull at Cnossus, of the Stymphahan buds, of the hydia, and of the Aigive hon. As you enter the bronze doors you see on the right, before the pillar, Iphitus being crowned by a woman, Ecechenia (Truce), as the elegiac couplet on the statue says. Within the temple stand pillars, and inside also are porticoes above, with an approach through them to the image. There has also been constructed a winding ascent to the roof.

¹ There are good reasons, chronological and artistic, for thinking that neither Paeonius nor Alcamenes carved the figures on the pediments

This is supposed to be a mistake

XI. The god sits on a throne, and he is made of gold and ivory. On his head lies a gailand which is a copy of olive shoots. In his right hand he carries a Victory, which, like the statue, is of ivory and gold, she wears a ribbon and—on her head—a garland In the left hand of the god is a sceptre, ornamented with every kind of metal, and the bird sitting on the sceptie is the eagle. The sandals also of the god are of gold, as is likewise his robe. On the 10be are embroidered figures of animals and the flowers of the lily The throne is adorned with gold and with jewels, to say nothing of ebony and ivory Upon it are painted figures and wrought There are four Victories, represented as dancing women, one at each foot of the thione, and two others at the base of each foot On each of the two front feet are set Theban children ravished by sphinxes, while under the sphinxes Apollo and

Artemis are shooting down the children of Niobe Between the feet of the throne are four rods, each one stretching from foot to foot. The rod straight opposite the entiance has on it seven images, how the eighth of them disappeared nobody knows These must be intended to be copies of obsolete contests, since in the time of Pheidias contests for boys had not yet been introduced 1. The figure of one binding his own head with a libbon is said to resemble in appearance Pantarces, a stripling of Elis said to have been the love of Pheidias Pantaices too won the wrestling-bout for boys at the eightysixth Festival On the other rods is the band that with Heracles fights against the Amazons The number of figures in the two parties is twenty-nine, and Theseus too is ranged among the allies of Heracles The throne is supported not only by the feet, but also by an equal number of pillars standing between the feet It is impossible to go under the throne, in the way we enter the inner part of the throne at Amyclae At Olympia there are screens constructed like walls which keep people out Of these screens the part opposite the doors is only covered with dark-blue paint, the other parts show pictures by Panaenus Among them is Atlas, supporting heaven and earth, by whose side stands Heracles ready to chanot, Zeus and Hera, Hephaestus, and by his side Giace. Close to her comes Hermes, and close to Hermes Hestia. After Hestia is Eros receiving Aphrodite as she rises from the sea, and Aphrodite is being crowned by Persuasion. There are also rehefs of Apollo with Artemis, of Athena and of Heracles, and near the end of the pedestal Amphitrite and Poseidon, while the Moon is driving what I think is a horse. Some have said that the steed of the goddess is a mule and not a hoise, and they tell a silly story about the mule.

I know that the height and breadth of the Olympic Zeus have been measured and recorded, but I shall not praise those who made the measurements, for even their records fall far short of the impression made by a sight of the image. Nay, the god himself according to legend bore witness to the artistic skill of Pheidias. For when the image was quite finished Pheidias prayed the god to show by a sign whether the work was to his liking. Immediately, runs the legend, a thunderbolt fell on that part of the floor where down to the present day the bronze jar stood to cover the place.

All the floor in front of the image is paved, not with white, but with black tiles. In a circle round the black stone runs a raised rim of Parian marble, to keep in the olive oil that is poured out. For olive oil is beneficial to the image at Olympia, and it is olive oil that keeps the ivory from being harmed by the marshiness of the Altis. On the Athenian

Acropolis the ivory of the image they call the Maiden is benefited, not by olive oil, but by water. For the Acropolis, owing to its great height, is overdry, so that the image, being made of ivory, needs water or dampness. When I asked at Epidaurus why they pour neither water nor olive oil on the image of Asclepius, the attendants at the sanctuary informed me that both the image of the god and the throne were built over a cistein

XII. Those who think that the projections from the mouth of an elephant are not horns but teeth of the animal should consider both the elk, a beast of the Celtic land, and also the Aethiopian bull Male elks have horns on their brows, but the female does not grow them at all Ethiopian bulls grow their hoins on their noses Who therefore would be greatly surprised at horns growing out of an animal's mouth? They may also correct their error from the following considerations. Horns drop off animals each year and grow again, the deer and the antelope undergo this experience, and so likewise does the elephant But a tooth will never be found to grow again, at least after the animal is full-grown So if the projections through the mouth were teeth and not horns, how could they grow up again? Again, a tooth refuses to yield to fire, but fire turns the hoins of oven and elephants from round to flat, and also into other shapes. However, the hippopotamus and the boar have tusks growing out of the lower

Jaw, but we do not see homs growing out of jaws So be assured that an elephant's homs descend through the temples from above, and so bend outwards. My statement is not hearsay. I once saw an elephant's skull in the sanctuary of Artemis in Campania. The sanctuary is about thirty stades from Capua, which is the capital of Campania. So the elephant differs from all other animals in the way its homs grow, just as its size and shape are peculiar to itself. And the Greeks in my opinion showed an unsurpassed zeal and generosity in honouring the gods, in that they imported mory from India and Aethropia to make images

In Olympia there is a woollen cuitain, adoined with Assyrian weaving and Phoenician puiple, which was dedicated by Antiochus, who also gave as offerings the golden aegis with the Gorgon on it above the theatie at Athens. This curtain is not drawn upwards to the roof as is that in the temple of Artemis at Ephesus, but it is let down to the ground by cords. The offerings inside, or in the fore-temple, include a throne of Arimnestus, king of Etruria, who was the first foreigner to present an offering to the Olympic Zeus, and bronze horses of Cymsca, tokens of an Olympic victory. These are not as large as real horses, and stand in the fore-temple on the right as you enter. There is also a tripod, plated with bionze, upon which, before the table was made, were displayed the crowns for the victors There are statues of emperors Hadman, of Parian marble, dedicated by the cities of the Achaean confederacy, and Trajan, dedicated by all the Greeks This emperor subdued the Getae beyond Thrace, and made war on Osroes the descendant of Arsaces and on the Parthians Of his aichitectural achievements the most remarkable are baths called after him, a large circular theatre, a building for hoise-races which is actually two stades long, and the Forum at Rome, worth seeing not only for its general beauty but especially for its 100f made of bronze. Of the statues set up in the round buildings, the amber one represents Augustus the Roman emperor, the worv one they told me was a portrait of Nicomedes. king of Bithynia After him the greatest city in Bithynia 264 BC. was renamed Nicomedeia, before him it was called Astacus, and its first founder was Zypoetes, a Thracian by buth to judge from his name This amber of which the statue of Augustus is made, when found native in the sand of the Eridanus, is very raie and piecious to men for many reasons, the other 'amber' is an alloy of gold and silver. In the temple at Olympia are four offerings of Neio-three crowns representing wild-olive leaves, and one representing oak leaves Here too are laid twenty-five bronze shields, which are for the armed men to carry in the race. is written the oath swoin by the Eleans to the Athenians, the Argives and the Mantineans, that they would be their allies for a hundred years.

XIII Within the Altis there is also a sacred enclosure consecrated to Pelops, whom the Eleans as much prefer in honour above the heroes of Olympia as they prefer Zeus over the other gods To the right of the entrance of the temple of Zeus, on the north side, lies the Pelopium enough removed from the temple for statues and other offerings to stand in the intervening space, and beginning at about the middle of the temple it extends as far as the real chamber. It is surrounded by a stone fence, within which trees grow and statues have been dedicated. The entrance is on the west The sanctuary is said to have been set apart to Pelops by Heracles the son of Amphitryon Heracles too was a great-grandson of Pelops, and he is also said to have sacrificed to him into the pit Right down to the present day the magistrates of the year sacrifice to him, and the victim is a black No portion of this sacrifice goes to the soothsaver, only the neck of the 1am it is usual to give to the "woodman," as he is called The woodman is one of the servants of Zeus, and the task assigned to him is to supply cities and private individuals with wood for sacrifices at a fixed rate, wood of the white poplar, but of no other tree, being allowed. It anybody, whether Elean or stranger, eat of the meat of the victim sacrificed to Pelops, he may not enter the temple of Zeus The same rule applies to those who sacrifice to Telephus at Pergamus on the river Carcus; these too may not go up to the temple of Asclepius before they have bathed following tale too is told When the war of the Greeks against Troy was prolonged, the soothsavers prophesied to them that they would not take the city until they had fetched the bow and arrows of Heracles and a bone of Pelops So it is said that they sent for Philoctetes to the camp, and from Pisa was brought to them a bone of Pelops-a shoulder-As they were returning home, the ship carrying the bone of Pelops was wrecked off Euboea in the storm Many years later than the capture of Tiov, Damaimenus, a fisherman from Eretiia, cast a net into the sea and drew up the bone Marvelling at its size he kept it hidden in the sand At last he went to Delphi, to inquire whose the bone was, and what he ought to do with it. It happened that by the providence of Heaven there was then at Delphi an Elean embassy plaving for deliverance from a pestilence. So the Pythian priestess ordered the Eleans to recover the bones of Pelops, and Damaimenus to give back to the Eleans what he had found He did so, and the Eleans repaid him by appointing him and his descendants to be The shoulder-blade of guardians of the bone Pelops had disappeared by my time, because, I suppose, it had been hidden in the depths so long, and besides its age it was greatly decayed through the salt water That Pelops and Tantalus once dwelt in my country there have remained signs right down to the present day. There is a lake called after Tantalus and a famous grave, and on a peak of Mount Sipylus there is a throne of Pelops beyond the sanctuary of Plastene the Mother. If you cross the river Heimus you see an image of Aphrodite in Temnus made of a living myitle-tree It is a tradition among us that it was dedicated by Pelops when he was propitating the goddess and asking for Hippodameia to be his bride

The altar of Olympic Zeus is about equally distant from the Pelopium and the sanctuary of Hera, but it is in front of both. Some say that it was built by Idaean Heracles, others by the local heroes two generations later than Heracles It has been made from the ash of the thighs of the victims sacrificed to Zeus, as is also the altar at Pergamus is an ashen altar of Samian Hera not a bit grander than what in Attica the Athenians call "improvised hearths" The first stage of the altar at Olympia, called prothysis, has a circumference of one hundred and twenty-five feet, the cucumference of the stage on the prothysis is thirty-two feet, the total height of the altar reaches to twenty-two feet The victims themselves it is the custom to sacrifice on the lower stage, the prothysis But the thighs they carry up to the highest part of the altar and burn them there The steps that lead up to the prothysis from either side are made of stone, but those leading from the prothysis to the upper part of the altar are, like the altar itself, composed of ashes The ascent to the prothysis may be made by maidens, and likewise by women, when they are not shut out from Olympia, but men only can ascend from the prothysis to the highest part of Even when the festival is not being held, sacrifice is offered to Zeus by private individuals and daily 1 by the Eleans Every year the soothsayers, keeping carefully to the nineteenth day of the month Elaphius,2 bring the ash from the town-hall, and making it into a paste with the water of the Alpheius they daub the altar therewith. never may the ash be made into paste with other water, and for this reason the Alpheius is thought to be of all rivers the dearest to Olympic Zeus There is also an altar at Didyma of the Milesians. which Heracles the Theban is said by the Milesians to have made from the blood of the victims in later times the blood of the sacrifices has not made the altar excessively large

XIV The altar at Olympia shows another strange peculiarity, which is this. The kite, the bird of prey with the most rapacious nature, never haims those who are sacrificing at Olympia. Should ever a kite seize the entrails or some of the flesh, it is regarded as an unfavourable sign for the sacrificer. There is a story that when Heracles the son of Alcmena was sacrificing at Olympia he was much worried by the flies. So either on his own initiative or at somebody's suggestion he sacrificed to Zeus

Averter of Flies, and thus the flies were diverted to the other side of the Alpheius It is said that in the same way the Eleans too sacrifice to Zeus Averter of Flies, to drive the flies out of Olympia

The Eleans are wont to use for the sacrifices to Zeus the wood of the white poplar and of no other tiee, preferring the white poplar, I think, simply and solely because Heracles brought it into Greece from Thesprotia And it is my opinion that when Heracles sacrificed to Zeus at Olympia he himself burned the thigh bones of the victims upon wood of the white poplar Heracles found the white poplar growing on the banks of the Acheion, the inver in Thespiotia, and for this reason Homer 2 calls it "Acheroid" So from the first down to the present all rivers have not been equally suited for the growth of plants and trees Tamarisks grow best and in the greatest numbers by the Maeander; the Boeotian Asopus can produce the tallest reeds, the persea tree flourishes only in the water of the Nile So it is no wonder that the white poplar grew first by the Acheron and the wild olive by the Alpheius, and that the dark poplar is a nursling of the Celtic land of the Celtic Endanus

Now that I have finished my account of the greatest altar, let me proceed to describe all the altars in Olympia. My narrative will follow in dealing with them the order in which the Eleans are wont to sacrifice on the altars. They sacrifice to Hestia first, secondly to Olympic Zeus, going to the altar within the temple, thirdly to Zeus Laoetas and to Poseidon Laoetas This sacrifice too it is usual to offer on one altai Fourthly and fifthly they sacrifice to Artemis and to Athena. Goddess of Booty, sixthly to the Worker Goddess The descendants of Pheidias, called Cleansers, have received from the Eleans the privilege of cleaning the image of Zeus from the dirt that settles on it, and they sacrifice to the Worker Goddess before they begin to polish the image There is another altar of Athena near the temple, and by it a square altar of Artemis using gently to a height. After the altars I have enumerated there is one on which they sacrifice to Alpheius and Artemis together. The cause of this Pindar, I think, intimates in an ode, and I give it 2 in my account of Letrini Not far from it stands another altar of Alpheius, and by it one of Hephaestus This altar of Hephaestus some Eleans call the altar of Wailike Zeus. These same Eleans also say that Oenomaus used to sacrifice to Warlike Zeus on this altar whenever he was about to begin a chariot-race with one of the suitors of Hippodameia After this stands an altar of Heracles surnamed Parastates (Assistant), there are altars of the brothers of Heracles-Epimedes, Idas, Paeonaeus, and Iasus, I am awaie, however, that the altar of Idas is called by others the altar of Acesidas. At the place where are the foundations of the house of Oenomaus stand two altais one is of Zeus of the Courtyard, which Oenomaus appears to have had built himself, and the other of Zeus of the Thunderbolt, which I believe they built later. when the thunderbolt had struck the house of Oenomaus. An account of the great altar I gave a little way back, it is called the altar of Olympian By it is an altai of Unknown Gods, and after this an altar of Zeus Punfier, one of Victory, and another of Zeus-this time surnamed Underground. There are also altars of all gods, and of Hera surnamed Olympian, this too being made of ashes. They say that it was dedicated by Clymenus. this comes an altai of Apollo and Hermes in common. because the Greeks have a story about them that Hermes invented the lyie and Apollo the lute Next come an altar of Concord, another of Athena, and the altar of the Mother of the gods close to the entrance to the stadium are two altars. one they call the altar of Hermes of the Games, the other the altar of Opportunity I know that a hymn to Opportunity is one of the poems of Ion of Chios, in the hymn Opportunity is made out to be the youngest child of Zeus Near treasury of the Sicyonians is an altar of Heracles, either one of the Curetes or the son of Alchiena, for both accounts are given. On what is called the Gaeum (sanctuary of Earth) is an altar of Earth, it too is of ashes. In more ancient days they say that there was an oracle also of Earth in this place. On what is called the Stomium (Mouth) the altai to Themis has been built. All round the altai of Zeus Descender runs a fence, this altar is near the great altar made of the ashes The reader must remember that the altars have not been enumerated in the order in which they stand, but the order followed by my namative is that followed by the Eleans in their sacrifices—By the sacred enclosure of Pelops is an altar of Dionysus and the Graces in common; between them is an altar of the Muses, and next to these an altar of the Nymphs

XV Outside the Altis there is a building called the workshop of Pheidias, where he wrought the image of Zeus piece by piece. In the building is an altar to all the gods in common Now return back again to the Altis opposite the Leonidaeum The Leonidaeum is outside the sacred enclosure. but at the processional entrance to the Altis, which is the only way open to those who take part in the processions. It was dedicated by Leonidas, a native, but in my time the Roman governors of Greece used it as their lodging. Between the processional entrance and the Leonidaeum is a street, for the Eleans call streets what the Athenians call lanes. Well, there is in the Altis, when you are about to pass to the left of the Leonidaeum, an altar of Aphrodite, and after it one of the Seasons. About opposite the real chambel a wild olive is growing on the right. It is called the olive of the Beautiful Crown, and from its leaves are made the crowns which it is customary to give to winners of Olympic contests Near this wild olive stands an altar of Nymphs, these too are styled Nymphs of the Beautiful Crowns. Outside the Altis, but on the right of the Leonidaeum, is an altar of Artems of the Market, and one has also been built for Mistiesses, and in my account of Aicadia 1 I will tell you about the goddess they call Mistress After this is an altar of Zeus of the Market, and before what is called the Front Seats stands an altar of Apollo surnamed Pythian, and after it one of Dionysus. The last altar is said to be not old, and to have been dedicated by private individuals go to the starting-point for the chariot-race there is an altai with an inscription "to the Bringer of Fate" This is plainly a suiname of Zeus, who knows the affans of men, all that the Fates give them, and all that is not destined for them. Near there is also an oblong altar of Fates, after it one of Heimes, and the next two are of Zeus Most High At the starting-point for the chariot-race, just about opposite the middle of it, there are in the open altars of Poseidon Hoise-god and Heia Horse-goddess, and near the pillar an altar of the Dioscuri At the entrance to what is called the Wedge there is on one side an altar of Aies Hoise-god, on the other one of Athena Hoise-goddess On entering the Wedge itself you see altars of Good Luck, Pan and Aphiodite, at the innermost part of the Wedge an altar of the Nymphs called Blooming An altar of Artemis stands on the right as you neturn from the Portico that the Eleans call the Portico of Agnaptus, giving to the building the name of its architect After re-entering the Altis by the processional gate there are behind the Heraeum altars of the river Cladeus and of Artemis: the one after them is Apollo's, the fourth is of Artemis surnamed Coccoca, and the fifth is of Apollo Thermius As to the Elean surname Thermius, the conjecture occurred to me that in the Attic dialect it would be thesmios (god of laws), but why Artemis is surnamed Coccoca I could not discover Before what is called Theecoleon is a building, in a corner of which has been set up an altar of Pan. The Town Hall of the Eleans is within the Altis, and it has been built beside the exit beyond the gymnasium In this gymnasium are the running tracks and the door of the Town Hall is an altar of Artemis Huntress In the Town Hall itself, on the right as you enter the room where they have the hearth, is an altar of Pan This hearth too is made of ashes, and on it file burns every day and likewise every night The ashes from this hearth, according to the account I have already given, they bring to the altar of Olympian Zeus, and what is brought from the hearth contributes a great deal to the size of the altai

Each month the Eleans sacrifice once on all the altars I have enumerated. They sacrifice in an ancient manner, for they buin on the altars incense with wheat which has been kneaded with honey, placing also on the altars twigs of olive, and using wine for a libation. Only to the Nymphs and the Mistresses are they not wont to pour wine in libation, nor do they pour it on the altar common to all the gods. The care of the sacrifices is given to a priest, holding office for one month, to soothsayers and libation-bearers, and also to a guide, a flute-player and the woodman. The traditional words spoken by them in the Town Hall at the libations. and the hymns which they sing, it were not right for me to introduce into my narrative. They pour libations, not only to the Greek gods, but also to the god in Libva, to Heia Ammonia and to Parammon, which is a suiname of Hermes. From very early times it is plain that they used the oracle in Libya, and in the temple of Ammon are altars which the Eleans dedicated. On them are engraved the questions of the Eleans, the replies of the god, and the names of the men who came to Ammon from Elis. These are in the temple of Ammon The Eleans also pour libations to all heroes and wives of heroes who are honoured either in Elis or among the Aetolians The songs sung in the Town Hall are in the Donic dialect, but they do not say who it was that composed them The Eleans also have a banqueting 100m This too is in the Town Hall, opposite the chamber where stands the hearth In this room they entertain the winners in the Olympic games

XVI It remains after this for me to describe the temple of Heia and the noteworthy objects contained in it. The Elean account says that it was the people of Scillus, one of the cities in Triphylia, who built the temple about eight years after Oxylus came to the throne of Elis. The style of the temple is Doile, and pillars stand all round it. In the real chamber one of the two pillars is of oak. The length of the temple is one hundred and sixty-nine.

feet, the breadth sixty-three feet, the height not short of fifty feet. Who the architect was they do not relate. Every fourth year there is woven for Hera a robe by the Sixteen women, and the same also hold games called Heraea. The games consist of foot-races for maidens. These are not all of the same age The first to run are the youngest; after them come the next in age, and the last to run are the oldest of the maidens. They run in the following way, their han hangs down, a tunic leaches to a little above the knee, and they bare the right shoulder as far as the breast. These too have the Olympic stadium reserved for their games, but the course of the stadium is shortened for them by about one-sixth of its length To the winning maidens they give crowns of olive and a portion of the cow sacrificed to Hera They may also dedicate statues with their names inscribed upon them Those who administer to the Sixteen are, like the presidents of the games, married women. The games of the maidens too are traced back to ancient times, they say that, out of gratitude to Hera for her marriage with Pelops, Hippodameia assembled the Sixteen Women, and with them inaugurated the Heraea They relate too that a victory was won by Chloris, the only surviving daughter of the house of Amphion, though with her they say survived one of her brothers As to the children of Niobe, what I myself chanced to learn about them I have set forth in my account of Argos 1 Besides the account already given they tell another story about the Sixteen Women as follows Damophon, it is said, when tyrant of Pisa did much gnevous haim to the Eleans. But when he died, since the people of Pisa refused to participate as a people in their tyrant's sins, and the Eleans too became quite ready to lay aside their grievances, they chose a woman from each of the sixteen cities of Elis still inhabited at that time to settle their differences, this woman to be the oldest, the most noble, and the most esteemed of all the women. The cities from which they chose the women were Elis, . . The women from these cities made peace between Pisa and Elis Later on they were entrusted with the management of the Heraean games, and with the weaving of the robe for Hera The Sixteen Women also arrange two choral dances. one called that of Physcoa and the other that of Hippodameia This Physica they say came from Elis in the Hollow, and the name of the parish where she lived was Oithia She mated they say with Dionysus, and bore him a son called Naicaeus When he grew up he made war against the neighbouring folk, and iose to great power, setting up moreover a sanctuary of Athena surnamed Narcaea They say too that Narcaeus and Physcoa were the first to pay worship to Dionysus So various honours are paid to Physcoa, especially that of the choral dance, named after her and managed by the Sixteen Women The Eleans still adhere to the other ancient customs, even though some of the cities have been destroyed For they are now divided into eight tribes, and they choose two women from each Whatever ritual it is the duty of either the Sixteen Women or the Elean umpires to perform, they do not perform before they have purified themselves with a pig meet for punification and with water Then punification takes place at the spring Piera You reach this spring as you go along the flat road from Olympia to Elis.

XVII These things, then, are as I have already described. In the temple of Hera is an image of Zeus, and the image of Heia is sitting on a thione with Zeus standing by her, bearded and with a helmet on his head. They are clude works of art The figures of Seasons next to them, seated upon thiones, were made by the Aegmetan Smilis Be- circa side them stands an image of Themis, as being BC mother of the Seasons It is the work of Dorycleidas, a Lacedaemonian by buth and a disciple of Dipoenus and Scyllis The Hesperides, five in number, were made by Theocles, who like Dorycleidas was a Lacedaemonian, the son of Hegylus; he too, they say, was a student under Scyllis and Dipoenus The Athena wearing a helmet and carrying a spear and shield is, it is said, a work of Medon, a Lacedaemonian, brother of Dorycleidas and a pupil of the same masters. Then the Maid and Demeter sit opposite each other, while Apollo and Artemis stand opposite each other. Here too have been dedicated Leto, Fortune, Dionysus and a winged Victory I cannot say who the artists were, but these figures too are in my opinion very ancient The figures I have enumerated are of ivory and gold, but at a later date other images were dedicated in the Heraeum, including a marble Heimes carrying the baby Dionysus a work of Praxiteles, and a bronze Aphrodite made by Cleon of Sicyon The master of this Cleon, called Anti- grea phanes, was a pupil of Periclytus, who himself was 355 BC a pupil of Polycleitus of Argos A nude gilded child is seated before Aphrodite, a work fashioned by Boethus of Calchedon There were also brought hither from what is called the Philippeum other images of gold and ivory, Eurydice the wife of Aridaeus and Olympias the wife of Philip

There is also a chest made of cedar, with figures on it, some of ivory, some of gold, others carved out of the cedar-wood itself. It was in this chest that Cypselus, the tyrant of Counth, was hidden by his mother when the Bacchidae were anxious to discover him after his birth. In gratitude for the saving of Cypselus, his descendants, Cypselids as they are called, dedicated the chest at Olympia. The Counthians of that age called chests kypselar, and from this word, they say, the child received his name of Cypselus. On most of the figures on the chest there are inscriptions, written in the ancient characters. In some cases the letters read straight on, but in others the form of the writing is what the Greeks call bustrophedon. It is like this: at the end of the line the second line turns back, as runners do when running the double race over the inscriptions on the chest are written in winding characters difficult to decipher Beginning our survey at the bottom we see in the first space of the chest the following scenes Oenomaus is chasing Pelops, who is holding Hippodameia Each of them has two horses, but those of Pelops have wings Next is wrought the house of Amphiaraus, and baby Amphilochus is being carried by some old woman or other In front of the house stands Eriphyle with the necklace, and by her are her daughters Eurydice and Demonassa, and the boy Alcmaeon naked. Asius in his poem makes out Alemena also to be a daughter of Amphiaraus and Eriphyle driving the chariot of Amphiaiaus, holding the reins in one hand and a spear in the other Amphiaraus aheady has one foot on the chariot and his sword drawn; he is turned towards Eriphyle in such a transport of anger that he can scarcely refrain from striking After the house of Amphiaraus come the games at the funeral of Pelias, with the spectators looking at the competitors Heracles is seated on a throne, and behind him is a woman There is no inscription saying who the woman is, but she is playing on a Phivgian, not a Greek, flute. Driving chariots drawn by pans of hoises are Pisus, son of Perieres, and Asterion, son of Cometas (Asterion is said to have been one of the Argonauts), Polydeuces, Admetus and Euphemus. The poets declare that the last was a son of Poseidon and a companion of Jason on his vovage to Colchis He it is who is winning the chariot-race. Those who have boldly ventured to box are Admetus and Monsus, the son of Ampyx Between them stands a man playing the flute, as in our day they are accustomed to play the flute when the competitors in the pentathlum are The wrestling-bout between Jason and Peleus is an even one Eurybotas is shown throwing the quoit, he must be some famous quoit-thrower. Those engaged in a lunning-race are Melanion, Neotheus and Phalareus, the fourth runner is Argeius, and the fifth is Iphiclus Iphiclus is the winner, and Acastus is holding out the crown to He is probably the father of the Protesilans who joined in the war against Troy. Tripods too are set here, prizes of course for the winners, and there are the daughters of Pelias, though the only one with her name inscribed is Alcestis Iolaus, who voluntarily helped Heracles in his labours, is shown as a victor in the chariot-race At this point the funeral games of Pelias come to an end. and Heracles, with Athena standing beside him, is shooting at the hydra, the beast in the liver Amymone Heracles can be easily recognised by his exploit and his attitude, so his name is not inscribed by him There is also Phineus the Thracian, and the sons of Boreas are chasing the harpies away from him she has a black child like one who is asleep. Each has his feet tuined different ways. The inscriptions declare, as one could infer without inscriptions, that the figures are Death and Sleep, with Night the nurse of both. A beautiful woman is punishing an ugly one choking her with one hand and with the other striking her with a staff. It is Justice who thus treats Injustice. Two other women are pounding in mortars with pestles, they are supposed to be wise in medicine-lore, though there is no inscription to them. Who the man is who is followed by a woman is made plain by the hexameter verses, which run thus—

Idas bungs back, not against her will,
Fan-ankled Marpessa, daughter of Evenus, whom Apollo carried off.

A man wearing a tunic is holding in his right hand a cup, and in his left a necklace, Alemena is taking hold of them. This scene represents the Greek story how Zeus in the likeness of Amphitryon had intercourse with Alemena. Menelaus, wearing a breastplate and carrying a sword, is advancing to kill Helen, so it is plain that Troy has been captured. Medeia is seated upon a throne, while Jason stands on her right and Aphrodite on her left. On them is an inscription—

Jason weds Medeia, as Aphrodite bids.

There are also figures of Muses singing, with Apollo leading the song, these too have an inscription -

This is Leto's son, prince Apollo, far-shooting; Around him are the Muses, a graceful choir, whom he is leading.

Atlas too is supporting, just as the story has it, heaven and earth upon his shoulders, he is also carrying the apples of the Hesperides. A man holding a sword is coming towards Atlas This everybody can see is Heracles, though he is not mentioned specially in the inscription, which reads—

Here is Atlas holding heaven, but he will let go the apples.

There is also Ares clad in armour and leading Aphrodite. The inscription by him is "Enyalius" There is also a figure of Thetis as a maid; Peleus is taking hold of her, and from the hand of Thetis a snake is darting at Peleus. The sisters of Medusa, with wings, are chasing Perseus, who is flying Only Perseus has his name inscribed on him.

On the third space of the chest are military scenes. The greater number of the figures are on foot, though there are some knights in two-horse chariots. About the soldiers one may infer that they are advancing to battle, but that they will recognise and greet each other. Two different accounts of them are given by the guides. Some have said that they are the Aetolians with Oxylus and the ancient Eleans, and that they are meeting in iemembrance of their original descent and as a sign of their mutual good will Others declare that the soldiers are meeting in battle, and that they are Pylians and Aicadians about to fight by the city Pheia and the river Iardanus But it cannot for a moment be admitted that the ancestor of Cypselus, a Counthian, having the chest made as a possession for himself, of his own accord passed over all Corinthian story, and had caived on the chest foreign events which were not tamous The following interpretation suggested itself to me Cypselus and his ancestors came originally from Gonussa above Sicyon, and one of their ancestors was Melas, the son of Antasus. But, as I have already related in my account of Corinth, 1 Aletes refused to admit as settlers Melas and the host with him, being nervous about an oracle which had been given him from Delphi, but at last Melas, using every ait of winning favours, and returning with entreaties every time he was driven away, persuaded Aletes however reluctantly to receive them One might infer that this army is represented by the figures wrought upon the chest

XIX In the fourth space on the chest as you go round from the left is Boreas, who has carried off Oreithyia, instead of feet he has serpents' tails Then comes the combat between Heracles and Geryones, who is represented as three men joined to one another. There is Theseus holding a lyre, and by his side is Ariadne gripping a crown.

Achilles and Memnon are fighting, their mothers stand by their side. There is also Melanion, by whom is Atalanta holding a young deei. Ajax is fighting a duel with Hector, according to the challenge, and between the pair stands Strife in the form of a most repulsive woman. Another figure of Strife is in the sanctuary of Ephesian Artemis, Calliphon of Samos included it in his picture of the battle at the ships of the Greeks. On the chest are also the Dioscuri, one of them a beardless youth, and between them is Helen. Aethra, the daughter of Pittheus, hes thrown to the ground under the feet at Helen. She is clothed in black, and the inscription upon the group is an hexameter line with the addition of a single word.

The sons of Tyndareus are carrying off Helen, and are diagging Aethra From Athens²

Such is the way this line is constructed. Iphidamas, the son of Antenor, is lying, and Coon is fighting for him against Agamemnon. On the shield of Agamemnon is Fear, whose head is a lion's. The inscription above the corpse of Iphidamas runs Iphidamas, and this is Coon fighting for him.

The inscription on the shield of Agamemnon runs

This is the Fear of mortals he who holds him is Agamemnon.

1 Iliad VII 225 foll.

² Various attempts have been made to emend this inscription, which is obviously corrupt. None of them is satisfactory

There is also Hermes bringing to Alexander the son of Priam the goddesses of whose beauty he is to judge, the inscription on them being:

Here is Hermes, who is showing to Alexander, that he may arbitrate

Concerning their beauty, Hera, Athena and Aphrodite

On what account Aitems has wings on her shoulders I do not know, in her right hand she grips a leopard, in her left a lion. Ajax too is represented dragging Cassandia from the image of Athena, and by him is also an inscription

Ajax of Loci is diagging Cassandra from Athena.

Polyneices, the son of Oedipus, has fallen on his knee, and Eteocles, the other son of Oedipus, is tushing on him. Behind Polyneices stands a woman with teeth as cruel as those of a beast, and her fingernails are bent like talons. An inscription by her calls her Doom, implying that Polyneices has been carried off by fate, and that Eteocles fully deserved his end. Dionysus is lying down in a cave a bearded figure holding a golden cup, and clad in a tunic teaching to the feet. Around him are vines, appletices and pomegranate-trees.

The highest space—the spaces are five in number—shows no inscription, so that we can only conjecture what the reliefs mean—Well, there is a grotto and in it a woman sleeping with a man upon a couch. I was of opinion that they were Odysseus and Circe, basing my view upon the number of the handmaidens in front of the grotto and upon what they are doing. For the women are four, and they are engaged on the tasks which Homer mentions in his poetry. There is a Centaur with only two of his legs those of a horse, his forelegs are human. Next come two-horse chariots with women standing in them The horses have golden wings, and a man is giving aimour to one of the women I conjecture that this scene refers to the death of Patroclus, the women in the chariots, I take it, are Nereids, and Thetis is receiving the armour from Hephaestus moreover, he who is giving the armour is not strong upon his feet, and a slave follows him behind, holding a pan of fire-tongs. An account also is given of the Centaui, that he is Chiion, freed by this time from human affairs and held worthy to share the home of the gods, who has come to assuage the grief of Achilles Two maidens in a mulecart, one holding the reins and the other wearing a veil upon her head, are thought to be Nausicaa, the daughter of Alcinous, and her handmaiden, driving to the washing-pits. The man shooting at Centaurs, some of which he has killed, is plainly Heracles, and the exploit is one of his

As to the maker of the chest, I found it impossible to form any conjecture. But the inscriptions upon it, though possibly composed by some other poet, are, as I was on the whole inclined to hold, the work of Eumelus of Corinth? My main reason for this view is the processional hymn he wrote for Delos

XX There are here other offerings also a couch of no great size and for the most part adorned with ivory, the quoit of Iphitus, a table on which are set out the crowns for the victors. The couch is said to have been a toy of Hippodameia. The quoit of Iphitus has inscribed upon it the truce which the Eleans proclaim at the Olympic festivals; the inscription is not written in a straight line, but the letters run in a circle round the quoit The table is made of ivory and gold, and is the work of Colotes 1 Colotes is said to have been a native of Heracleia, but specialists in the history of sculpture maintain that he was a Parian, a pupil of Pasiteles, who himself was a pupil of . . There are figures of Heia, Zeus, the Mother of the gods, Hermes, and Apollo with Aitemis. Behind is the disposition of the games On one side are Asclepius and Health, one of his daughters, Aies too and Contest by his side, on the other are Pluto, Dionysus, Persephone and nymphs, one of them carrying a ball As to the key (Pluto holds a key) they say that what is called Hades has been locked up by Pluto, and that nobody will return back again therefrom

I must not omit the story told by Aristarchus, the guide to the sights at Olympia. He said that in his day the roof of the Heraeum had fallen into decay. When the Eleans were repairing it, the coipse of a foot-soldier with wounds was discovered between the roof supporting the tiles and the ornamented ceiling This soldier took part in the eina battle in the Altis between the Eleans and the Lacedaemonians The Eleans in fact climbed to defend themselves on to all high places alike, including the sanctuaries of the gods At any rate this soldier seemed to us to have crept under here after growing faint with his wounds, and so died Lying in a completely sheltered spot the corpse would suffer haim neither from the heat of summer not from the frost of winter Austarchus said further that they carried the corpse outside the Altis and buried him in the earth along with his aimoui

What the Eleans call the pillar of Oenomaus is in the direction, of the sanctuary of Zeus as you go from the great altar On the left are four pillars with a roof on them, the whole constructed to protect a wooden pillar which has decayed through age, being for the most part held together by bands. This pillar, so runs the tale, stood in the house of Oenomaus Struck by lightning the rest of the house was destroyed by the fire, of all the building only this pillar was left. A bronze tablet in front of it has the following elegiac inscription -

Stranger, I am a remnant of a famous house,

I, who once was a pillar in the house of Oenomaus,

Now by Cionus' son I lie with these bands upon me.

A precious thing, and the baleful flame of fire consumed me not.

will relate A Roman senator won an Olympic victory Wishing to leave behind, as a memorial of his victory, a bionze statue with an inscription, he proceeded to dig, so as to make a foundation When his excavation came very close to the pillar of Oenomaus, the diggers found there fragments of aimour, budles and curbs

These I saw myself as they were being dug out. A temple of no great size in the Doric style they have called down to the present day Metroum,1 keeping its ancient name. No image lies in it of the Mother of the gods, but there stand in it statues of Roman emperors The Metioum is within the Altıs, and so is a round building called the Philippeum On the roof of the Philippeum is a bronze poppy which binds the beams together building is on the left of the exit over against the Town Hall. It is made of buint brick and is surrounded by columns It was built by Philip after the fall of Greece at Chaeroneia Here are set statues of Philip and Alexander, and with them is Amyntas, Philip's father These works too are by Leochares, and are of ivory and gold, as are the statues of Olympias and Eurydice

XXI From this point my account will proceed to a description of the statues and votive offerings; but I think that it would be wrong to mix up the accounts of them. For whereas on the Athenian Acropolis statues are votive offerings like everything else, in the Altis some things only are dedicated in honour of the gods, and statues are merely part of the prizes awarded to the victors. The statues I will mention later, I will turn first to the votive offerings, and go over the most noteworthy of them

As you go to the stadium along the road from the Metroum, there is on the left at the bottom of Mount Cromus a platform of stone, night by the very mountain, with steps through it. By the platform have been set up bionze images of Zeus have been made from the fines inflicted on athletes who have wantonly broken the rules of the contests. and they are called Zanes (figures of Zeus) by the The first, six in number, were set up in the ninety-eighth Olympiad For Eupolus of Thessaly bribed the boxers who entered the competition, Agenor the Aicadian and Piytanis of Cyzicus, and with them also Phormio of Halicainassus, who had won at the pieceding Festival. This is said to have been the first time that an athlete violated the rules of the games, and the first to be fined by the Eleans were Eupolus and those who accepted bubes from Two of these images are the work of Cleon of Sicvon; who made the next four I do not Except the third and the fourth these images have elegiac inscriptions on them The first of the inscriptions is intended to make plain that an Olympic victory is to be won, not by money, but by swiftness of foot and strength of body inscription on the second image declares that the image stands to the glory of the deity, through the piety of the Eleans, and to be a terror to law-breaking athletes. The purport of the inscription on the fifth image is praise of the Eleans, especially for their fining the bovers, that of the sixth and last is that the images are a warning to all the Greeks not to give bribes to obtain an Olympic victory

Next after Eupolus they say that Callippus of Athens, who had entered for the pentathlum, bought off his fellow-competitors by bribes, and that this offence occurred at the hundred and twelfth Festival man When the fine had been imposed by the Eleans on Callippus and his antagonists, the Athenians commissioned Hypereides to persuade the Eleans to remit them the fine. The Eleans refused this favour, and the Athenians were disdainful enough not to pay the money and to boycott the Olympic games, until finally the god at Delphi declared that he would deliver no oracle on any matter to the Athenians before they had paid the Eleans the fine So when it was paid, images, also six in number, were made in honour of Zeus, on them are inscribed elegiac verses not a whit more elegant than those relating the fine of Eupolus The gist of the first inscription is that the images were dedicated because the god by an oracle expressed his approval of the Elean decision against the pentathletes; on the second image and likewise on the third are praises of the Eleans for their fining the competitois in the pentathlum. The fourth purports to say that the contest at

Olympia is one of merit and not of wealth; the inscription on the fifth declares the reason for dedicating the images, while that on the sixth commemorates the oracle given to the Athenians by

Delphi

The images next to those I have enumerated are two in number, and they were dedicated from a fine imposed on wiestlers As to their names, neither I not the guides of the Eleans knew them these images too are inscriptions; one says that the Rhodians paid money to Olympian Zeus for the wrong-doing of a wrestler, the other that certain men wrestled for bribes and that the image was made from the fines imposed upon them of the information about these athletes comes from the guides of the Eleans, who say that it was at the hundred and seventy-eighth Festival that Eudelus accepted a bube from Philostratus, and that this Philostratus was a Rhodian This account I found was at variance with the Elean record of Olympic victories. In this record it is stated that Strato of Alexandria at the hundred and seventy-eighth Festival won on the same day the victory in the paneratium and the victory at wrestling Alexandria on the Canopic mouth of the Nile was founded by Alexander the son of Philip, but it is said that previously there was on the site a small Egyptian town called Racotis Three competitors before the time of this Strato, and three others after him, are known to have received the wild-olive for winning the panciatium and the wiestling: Caprus from Elis itself, and of the Greeks on the other side of the Aegean, Aristomenes of Rhodes and Protophanes of Magnesia on the Lethaeus, were earlier than Strato, after him came Marion his compatriot, Aristeas of Stratoniceia (anciently both land and city were called Chrysaoris), and the seventh was Nicostiatus, from Cilicia on the coast, though he was in no way a Cilician except in name. This Nicostratus while still a baby was stolen from Prymnessus in Phrygia by robbers, being a child of a noble family. Conveyed to Aegeae he was bought by somebody or other, who some time afterwards dreamed a dream. He thought that a lion's whelp lay beneath the pallet-bed on which Nicostiatus was sleeping. Now Nicostiatus, when he grew up, won other victories elsewhere, besides in the pancratium and wiestling at Olympia

Afterwards others were fined by the Eleans, among whom was an Alexandrian boxer at the two hundred and eighteenth Festival The name of the man fined was Apollonius, with the surname of Rhantes-it is a sort of national characteristic for Alexandrians to have a surname This man was the first Egyptian to be convicted by the Eleans of a misdemeanour It was not for giving or taking a bube that he was condemned, but for the following outrageous conduct in connection with the games He did not arrive by the prescribed time, and the Eleans, if they followed then rule, had no option but to exclude him from the games. For his excuse, that he had been kept back among the Cyclades islands by contrary winds, was proved to be an untruth by Heracleides, himself an Alexandrian by buth He showed that Apollonius was late because he had been picking up some money at the Ionian In these circumstances the Eleans shut out from the games Apollonius with any other boxer who came after the prescribed time, and let the crown go to Heracleides without a contest upon Apollonius put on his gloves for a fight, rushed at Heracleides, and began to pummel him, though he had already put the wild-olive on his head and had taken refuge with the umpiles For this lightheaded folly he was to pay dearly. There are also two other images of modern workmanship. For at the two hundred and twenty-sixth Festival they detected that two boxing men in a fight for victory only, had agreed about the issue for a sum of money For this misconduct a fine was inflicted. and of the images of Zeus that were made, one stands on the left of the entrance to the stadium and the other on the right Of the boxers, the one bribed was called Didas, and the briber was Sarapammon They were from the same district, the newest in Egypt, called Assinoites It is a wonder in any case if a man has so little respect for the god of Olympia as to take or give a bribe in the contests. it is an even greater wonder that one of the Eleans themselves has fallen so low But it is said that the Elean Damonicus did so fall at the hundred and ninetysecond Festival They say that collusion occurred between Polyctor the son of Damonicus and Sosander of Smyrna, of the same name as his father; these were competitors for the wrestling prize of wild-Damonicus, it is alleged, being exceedingly ambitious that his son should win, bribed the father of Sosander. When the transaction became known, the umpries imposed a fine, but instead of imposing it on the sons they directed their anger against the fathers, for that they were the real sunners. From this fine images were made. One is set up in the Elean gymnasium, the other is in the Altis in front of what is called the Painted Portico, because anciently there were pictures on the walls. Some call this Portico the Echo Portico, because when a man has shouted his voice is repeated by the echo seven or even more times.

They say that a panciatiast of Alexandria, by name Sarapion, at the two hundred and first Festival, was so afraid of his antagonists that on the day before the panciatium was to be called on he ran away. This is the only occasion on record when any man, not to say a man of Egypt, was fined for cowardice.

XXII These were the causes for which I found that these images were made. There are also images of Zeus dedicated by States and by individuals. There is in the Altis an altar near the entrance leading to the stadium. On it the Eleans do not sacrifice to any of the gods, but it is customary for the trumpeters and heralds to stand upon it when they compete By the side of this altar has been built a pedestal of bronze, and on it is an image of Zeus, about six cubits in height, with height of the image is seven cubits, and in its hands are an eagle and the bolt of Zeus, in accordance with the poets' tales. It was dedicated by Hippagoras, Phiynon, and Aenesidemus, who in my opinion was some other Aenesidemus and not the tyrant of Leontini

XXIII As you pass by the entrance to the Council Chamber you see an image of Zeus standing with no inscription on it, and then on turning to the north another image of Zeus This is turned towards the rising sun, and was dedicated by those Greeks who at Plataea fought against the Persians under Mar- 179 BC donius. On the right of the pedestal are inscribed the cities which took part in the engagement · first the Lacedaemonians, after them the Athenians, third the Counthians, fourth the Sicyonians, fifth the Aeginetans, after the Aeginetans, the Megarians and Epidaurians, of the Aicadians the people of Tegea and Orchomenus, after them the dwellers in Phlius, Troezen and Hermion, the Tirynthians from the Argolid, the Plataeans alone of the Boeotians, the Argives of Mycenae, the islanders of Ceos and Melos, Ambraciots of the Thesprotian mainland, the Tenians and the Lepieans, who were the only people from Triphylia, but from the Aegean and the Cyclades there came not only the Temans but also the Naxians and Cythmans, Styrians too from Euboea, after them Eleans, Potidaeans, Anactorians, and lastly the Chalcidians on the Euripus Of these cities the following are at the present day uninhabited. the Argives after the Persian wars. The Ambiaciots and Anactorians, colonists of Corinth, were taken away by the Roman emperor 1 to help to found Nicopolis near Actium. The Potidaeans twice suffered removal from their city, once at the hands of Philip, the son of Amyntas, and once before this 356 BC at the hands of the Athenians. Afterwards, how-40-40 ever, Cassander restored the Potidaeans to their along the homes, but the name of the city was changed from Potidaea to Cassandiera after the name of its founder. The image at Olympia dedicated by the Greeks was made by Anaxagoras of Aegina. The name of this artist is omitted by the historians of Plataea.

In front of this Zeus there is a bronze slab, on which are the terms of the Thirty-years Peace between the Lacedaemonians and the Athenians. The Athenians made this peace after they had reduced Euboea for the second time, in the third year 446-445 of the eighty-third Olympiad, when Crison of Himera won the foot-race One of the articles of the treaty is to the effect that although Argos has no part in the treaty between Athens and Sparta, yet the Athenians and the Aigues may privately, if they wish, be at peace with each other. Such are the terms of this treaty There is yet another image of Zeus dedicated beside the chariot of Cleosthenes. This chariot I will describe later, the image of Zeus was dedicated by the Megarians, and made by the brothers Psylacus and Onaethus with the help of their sons. About their date, their nation and their master, I can tell you nothing By the chariot of Gelon stands an ancient Zeus holding a sceptre, which is said to be an offering of the Hyblaeans There were two cities in Sicily called Hybla, one surnamed Geneatis and the other Greater, it being in fact the greater of the two They still retain then old names, and are in the district of Catana. Greater Hybla is entirely uninhabited, but Gereatis is a village of Catana, with a sanctuary of the goddess Hyblaea which is held in honour by the Sicilians The people of Gereatis, I think, brought the image to Olympia. For Philistus, the son of Archomenides, says that they were interpreters of portents and dreams, and more given to devotions than any other foreigners in Sicily Near the offering of the Hyblaeans has been made a pedestal of bronze with a Zeus upon it, which I conjecture to be about eighteen feet high. The donois and sculptors are set forth in elegiac verse .-

The Cleitonians dedicated this image to the god, a tithe _

From many cities that they had reduced by force

The sculptors were Aristo and Telestas, Own brothers and Lacomans.¹

I do not think that these Laconians were famous all over Greece, for had they been so the Eleans would have had something to say about them, and the Lacedaemonians more still, seeing that they were their fellow-citizens.

XXIV. By the side of the altar of Zeus Laoetas and Poseidon Laoetas is a Zeus on a bronze pedestal The people of Counth gave it and Musus made it. whoever this Musus may have been. As you go from the Council Chamber to the great temple there stands on the left an image of Zeus, crowned as it were with flowers, and with a thunderbolt set in his night hand It is the work of Ascarus of Thebes, a pupil of Canachus of Sicyon The inscription on it says that it is a tithe from the war between Phocis and Thessalv. If the Thessalians went to war with Phocis and dedicated the offering from Phocian plunder, this could not have been the so-called "Sacred War," but must have been a war between 55-546 the two States previous to the invasion of Greece by the Persians under their king. Not far from this is a Zeus, which, as is declared by the verse inscribed on it, was dedicated by the Psophidians for a success ın waı

On the right of the great temple is a Zeus facing the using of the sun, twelve feet high and dedicated, they say, by the Lacedaemonians, when they entered on a war with the Messemans after their second revolt On it is an elegiac couplet

Accept, king, son of Cionus, Olympian Zeus, a lovely image,

And have a heart propitious to the Lacedaemonians sanctuary before Mummius, and he dedicated at 146 E C Olympia a bionze Zeus from the spoils of Achaia It stands on the left of the offering of the Lacedaemonians, by the side of the first pillar on this side of the temple The largest of the bionze images of Zeus in the Altis is twenty-seven feet high, and was dedicated by the Eleans themselves from the plunder of the war with the Arcadians Beside the Pelopium is a pillar of no great height with a small image of Zeus on it, one hand is outstretched Opposite this are other offerings in a row, and likewise images of Zeus and Ganymedes Homer's poem 1 tells how Ganymedes was carried off by the gods to be winebearer to Zeus, and how horses were given to Tros in exchange for him. This offering was dedicated by the Thessalian Gnathis and made by Aristocles, pupil and son of Cleoetas.2 There is also another Zeus represented as a beardless youth, which is among offerings of Micythus. The history of Micythus, his family, and why he dedicated so many offerings at Olympia, my nairative will presently set forth 3 A little faither on in a straight line from the image I have mentioned is another beardless image of Zeus. It was dedicated by the people of Elaea, who live in the first city of Aeolis you reach on descending from the plain of the Caicus to the sea Yet another image of Zeus comes next, and the inscription on it says that it was dedicated by the Chersonesians of Cnidus from enemy spoils On either side of the image of Zeus they have dedicated images of Pelops and of the river Alpheius respectively. The greater part of the city of Cnidus is built on the Carian mainland, where are their most noteworthy possessions, but what is called Chersonnesus is an island lying near the mainland, to which it is joined by a bridge. It is the inhabitants of this quarter who dedicated to Zeus the offerings at Olympia, just as if Ephesians living in what is called Colesus were to say that they had dedicated an offering independently of the Ephesians There is also by the wall of the Altis a as a body Zeus turned towards the setting of the sun, it bears no inscription, but is said to be another offering of Mummius made from the plunder of the Achaean But the Zeus in the Council Chambei is of all the images of Zeus the one most likely to strike terror into the hearts of sinners He is surnamed Oath-god, and in each hand he holds a thunderbolt Beside this image it is the custom for athletes, their fathers and their brothers, as well as their trainers, to swear an oath upon slices of boar's flesh that in nothing will they sin against the Olympic games The athletes take this further oath also, that for ten successive months they have strictly followed the regulations for training. An oath is also taken by those who examine the boys, or the foals entering for races, that they will decide fairly and without taking bribes, and that they will keep secret what they learn about a candidate, whether accepted or not. I forgot to inquire what it is customary to do with the boar after the oath of the athletes, though the ancient custom about victims was that no human being might eat of that on which an oath

Such was the ancient custom Before the feet of the Oath-god is a bionze plate, with elegiac veises inscribed upon it, the object of which is to strike fear into those who forswear themselves

XXV. I have enumerated the images of Zeus within the Altis with the greatest accuracy. For the offering near the great temple, though supposed to be a likeness of Zeus, is really Alexander, the son of Philip—It was set up by a Corinthian, not one of the old Corinthians, but one of those settlers whom the Emperor planted in the city. I shall also mention those offerings which are of a different kind, and not representations of Zeus—The statues which have been set up, not to honour a deity, but to reward mere men, I shall include in my account of the athletes

The Messenians on the Strait in accordance with an old custom used to send to Rhegium a choius of thirty-five boys, and with it a trainer and a flautist, to a local festival of Rhegium. On one occasion a disaster befell them, for not one of those sent out returned home alive, but the ship with the boys on board went to the bottom The sea in fact at this strait is the stormiest of seas, it is made rough by winds bringing waves from both sides, from the Adriatic and the other sea, which is called the Tyrihenian, and even if there be no gale blowing, even then the strait of itself produces a very violent swell and strong currents So many monsters swarm in the water that even the air over the sea is infected with their stench. Accordingly a shipwrecked man has not even a hope left of getting out of the strait alive If it was here that disaster overtook the ship of Odysseus, nobody could believe that he swam out alive to Italy, were it not that the benevolence of the gods makes all things easy On this occasion the Messenians mouined for the loss of the boys, and one of the honours bestowed upon them was the dedication of bronze statues at Olympia, the group including the trainer of the chorus and the flautist The old inscription declared that the offerings were those of the Messemans at the strait; but afterwards Hippias, called "a sage" by the Greeks, composed the BC the elegiac verses on them The artist of the statues was Callon 1 of Elis

They are placed on the wall of the Altis, and I conjectured that the artist was Calamis, a conjecture in accordance cora with the tradition about them. Sicily is inhabited EC by the following races Sicamans, Sicels, and Phrygians, the first two crossed into it from Italy. while the Phivgians came from the liver Scamander and the land of the Troad The Phoenicians and Librans came to the island on a joint expedition. and are settlers from Carthage Such are the foreign races in Sicily The Greeks settled there include Donans and Ionians, with a small proportion of Phocians and of Attics

On the same wall as the offerings of the Agrigentines are two nude statues of Heracles as a boy One represents him shooting the hon at Nemea This Heracles and the lion with him were dedicated by Hippotion of Taientum, the artist being Nicodamus of Maenalus The other image was dedicated by Anaxippus of Mende, and was transferred to this place by the Eleans Previously it stood at the end of the road that leads from Elis to Olympia, called the Sacred Road There are also offerings dedicated by the whole Achaean race in common, they represent those who, when Hector challenged any Greek to meet him in single combat, daied to cast ots to choose the champion They stand, armed with spears and shields, near the great temple

Right opposite, on a second pedestal, is a figure of Nestor, who has thrown the lot of each into the helmet. The number of those casting lots to meet Hector is now only eight, for the ninth, the statue of Odysseus, they say that Nero carried to Rome, but Agamemnon's statue is the only one of the eight to have his name inscribed upon it; the writing is from right to left. The figure with the cock emblazoned on the shield is Idomeneus the descendant of Minos. The story goes that Idomeneus was descended from the Sun, the father of Pasiphae, and that the cock is sacred to the Sun and proclaims when he is about to use. An inscription too is written on the pedestal:—

To Zeus these images were dedicated by the Achaeans, Descendants of Pelops the godlike scion of Tantalus.

Such is the inscription on the pedestal, but the name of the artist is written on the shield of Idomeneus.

This is one of the many works of clever Onatas, The Aeginetan, whose sire was Micon

Not far from the offering of the Achaeans there is also a Heracles fighting with the Amazon, a woman on horseback, for her girdle—It was dedicated by Evagoras, a Zanclaean by descent, and made by Aristocles of Cydonia—Aristocles should be included amongst the most ancient sculptors, and though his

The Thasians, who are Phoenicians by descent, and sailed from Tyre, and from Phoenicia generally, together with Thasus, the son of Agenor, in search of Europa, dedicated at Olympia a Heracles, the pedestal as well as the image being of bronze. The height of the image is ten cubits, and he holds a club in his right hand and a bow in his left. They told me in Thasos that they used to worship the same Heracles as the Tyrians, but that afterwards, when they were included among the Greeks, they adopted the worship of Heracles the son of Amphitiyon. On the offering of the Thasians at Olympia there is an elegiac couplet—

This Onatas, though belonging to the Aeginetan school of sculpture, I shall place after none of the successors of Daedalus or of the Attic school

XXVI The Dorian Messenians who received Naupactus from the Athenians dedicated at Olympia the image of Victory upon the pillar. It is the could work of Paeonius of Mende, and was made from the proceeds of enemy spoils, I think from the war with the Arcainanians and Oeniadae. The Messenians themselves declare that their offering came from their exploit with the Athenians in the island of 425 B C Sphacteria, and that the name of their enemy was omitted through dread of the Lacedaemonians; for,

The offerings of Micvthus I found were numerous and not together. Next after Iphitus of Elis, and Echechenia crowning Iphitus, come the following offerings of Micvthus Amphitute, Poseidon and Hestia, the artist was Glaucus the Argive Along and the left side of the great temple Micythus dedicated other offerings the Maid, daughter of Demeter. Aphrodite, Gany medes and Artemis, the poets Homer and Hesiod, then again deities, Asclepius and Health Among the offerings of Micythus is Struggle carrying jumping-weights, the shape of which is as follows. They are half of a cucle, not an exact circle but elliptical, and made so that the fingers pass through as they do through the handle of a shield. Such are the fashion of them By the statue of Struggle are Dionysus, Oipheus the Thiacian, and an image of Zeus which I mentioned just now.1 They are the works of Dionysius of Argos They say that with Bo Micythus set up other offerings also in addition to these, and that they formed part of the treasures taken away by Nero The artists are said to have been Dionysius and Glaucus, who were Argives by buth, but the name of their teacher is not recorded Their date is fixed by that of Micythus, who dedicated the works of art at Olympia For Herodotus in his history 2 says that this Micythus, when Anaxilas was despot of Rhegium, became his slave and steward of his property, afterwards, on the death of Anaxilas, he went away to Tegea. The inscriptions on the offerings give Choerus as the father of Micythus, and as his fatherland the Greek cities of Rhegium and Messene on the Strait. The inscriptions say that he lived at Tegea, and he dedicated the offerings at Olympia in fulfilment of a vow made for the recovery of a son, who fell ill of a wasting disease

Near to the greater offerings of Micvthus, which were made by the Argive Glaucus, stands an image of Athena with a helmet on her head and clad in an aegis Nicodamus of Maenalus was the artist, but it was dedicated by the Eleans Beside the Athena has been set up a Victory The Mantineans dedicated it, but they do not mention the war in the inscription. Calamis is said to have made it without wings in imitation of the wooden image at Athens called Wingless Victory. By the smaller offerings of Micythus, that were made by Dionysius are some of the exploits of Heiacles, including what he did to the Nemean lion, the hydra, the Hound of Hell, and the boar by the river Erymanthus These were brought to Olympia by the people of Heracleia when they had overrun the land of the Mariandynians, then foreign neighbours Heracleia is a city built on the Euxine sea, a colony of Megaia, though the people of Tanagra in Boeotia joined in the settlement which is sacred to Pelops Among them are those dedicated by the Maenalian Phornis He crossed to Sicily from Maenalus to serve Gelon the son of Demomenes Distinguishing himself in the campaigns of Gelon and afterwards of his brother Hieron. he reached such a pitch of prosperity that he dedicated not only these offerings at Olympia but also others dedicated to Apollo at Delphi offerings at Olympia are two horses and two charioteers, a charioteer standing by the side of each of the hoises. The first horse and man are by Dionysius of Aigos, the second are the work of Simon of Aegina On the side of the first of the 453-400 horses is an inscription, the first part of which is not metrical It runs thus -

This is the hoise in which is, say the Eleans, the hippomanes (what marldens horses) It is plain to all that the quality of the horse is the result of magic skill It is much inferior in size and beauty to all the hoises standing within the Altis Moreover. its tail has been cut off, which makes the figure uglier still But male horses, not only in spring but on any day, are at heat towards it In fact they rush into the Altis, breaking their tethers or escaping from their grooms, and they leap upon it much more madly than upon a living brood mare, even the most beautiful of them Then hoofs slip off, but nevertheless they keep on neighing more and more, and leap with a yet more violent passion. until they are driven away by whips and sheer force In no other way can they be separated from the bronze hoise There is another marvel I know of. having seen it in Lydia: it is different from the horse of Phoimis, but like it not innocent of the magic ait. The Lydians surnamed Peisian have sanctuaries in the city named Hierocaesareia and at In each sanctuary is a chamber, and in Hypaepa the chamber are ashes upon an altar. But the colour of these ashes is not the usual colour of ashes Entering the chamber a magician piles div wood upon the altar, he first places a tiara upon his head and then sings to some god or other an invocation in a foreign tongue unintelligible to Greeks, reciting So it is without fire that the invocation from a book the wood must catch, and bright flames dart from it.

So much for this subject. Among these offerings is Phormis himself opposed to an enemy, and next are figures of him fighting a second and again a third. On them it is written that the soldier fighting is Phormis of Maenalus, and that he who dedicated the offerings was Lycortas of Syracuse. Clearly this Lycortas dedicated them out of friendship for Phormis. These offerings of Lycortas are also called by the Greeks offerings of Phormis. The Hermes carrying the ram under his arm, with a helmet on his head, and clad in tunic and cloak, is not one of the offerings of Phormis, but has been given to the god by the Arcadians of Pheneus The inscription says that the artist was Onatas of Aegina helped by Calliteles, who I think was a pupil or son of Onatas Not far from the offering of the Pheneatians is another image, Hermes with a heiald's wand inscription on it says that Glaucias, a Rhegian by descent, dedicated it, and Callon of Elis made it Of the bionze oven one was dedicated by the Corcyraeans and the other by the Eretrians of Eretiia was the artist Why the Corcyraeans dedicated the ox at Olympia and another at Delphi will be explained in my account of Phocis 1 About the offering at Olympia I heard the following story Sitting under this ox a little boy was playing with his head bent towards the ground Suddenly lifting his head he broke it against the bronze, and died a few days later from the wound. So the Eleans were purposing to remove the ox from out the Altis as being guilty of bloodshed But the god at Delphi gave an oracle that they were to let the offering stay where it was, after performing upon it the purificatory 1 rtes that are customary among the Greeks for unintentional shedding of blood

Under the plane trees in the Altis, just about in the centie of the enclosure, there is a bronze trophy, with an inscription upon the shield of the trophy, to the effect that the Eleans raised it as a sign that they had beaten the Lacedaemonians. It was in this battle that the warnor lost his life who was found lying in his aimour when the roof of the Heraeum was being repaired in my time. The offering of the Mendeans in Thrace came very near to beguing me into the belief that it was a representation of a competitor in the pentathlum. It stands by the side of Anauchidas of Elis, and it holds ancient jumping-weights. An elegiac couplet is written on its thigh—

To Zeus, king of the gods, as first-fruits was I placed here

By the Mendeans, who reduced Sipte by might of hand

Sipte seems to be a Thiacian fortress and city. The Mendeans themselves are of Greek descent, coming from Ionia, and they live inland at some distance from the sea that is by the city of Aenus.
